Seidman Accounting Firm Accepts S.E.C. Sanctions

Accused of Negligence in Auditing Books of 4 Companies—Ex-Head, Now Aide to Ford, Denies Involvement

By ROBERT D. HERSHEY Jr.
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Sept. 1 — The Securities and Exchange Commission, closing a three-year investigation, today accused the accounting firm formerly headed by the Presidential economic coordinator, L. William Seidman, of negligence in auditing the books of four companies. The commission also won agreement from the firm, Seidman and Seidman, to submit to some of the strongest sanctions ever imposed against an accountant.

The S.E.C. charged in an administrative proceeding that the major New York-based accounting firm had failed to uncover fraudulent conduct by the management of the four companies. The commission also moved against three of the companies in Federal courts today.

The most widely known of the four companies, the Equity Funding Corporation of America, had been sued by the commission in 1973 in connection with a massive fraud involving fictitious insurance policies.

Was Managing Partner
Mr. Seidman, who joined President Ford's staff in 1974, was managing partner of the accounting firm and a member of its policy board during most of the preceding three years when the alleged negligent conduct occurred. But the commission did not try to determine whether Mr. Seidman was personally involved since "most of the partners knew of this problem," an official said.

Mr. Seidman said today that "I was not personally involved" in the cases.

Upon joining the President's staff two years ago, Mr. Seidman severed his connections with the firm, which had been founded by his father and his uncle. However, Mr. Seidman said, he received "a normal pension" from Seidman & Seidman. He said in a telephone inter-

Beame Testifies 5½ Hours At S.E.C. Finance Inquiry

By STEVEN R. WEISMAN
Special to The New York Times

Mayor Beame spent five and a half hours testifying before the Securities and Exchange Commission yesterday as part of an investigation that many experts said would produce recommendations for drastic nationwide changes in municipal finance, and might also lead to potentially explosive political problems for local politicians.

With seven attorneys accompanying him, Mr. Beame appeared in morning and afternoon sessions with investigators at the S.E.C. regional headquarters at 26 Federal Plaza in Manhattan, where scores of New York City officials and executives with major city financial institutions have been summoned in the last six months to answer questions regarding allegations of fraud in city finances.

The Mayor's office said Mr. Beame had concluded his testimony and would make no further appearances before the commission.

Like the others who have responded to subpoenas and testified before the S.E.C., includ-

Thousands Are Turned Away as Jersey Track Opens

By STEVE CADY
Special to The New York Times

EAST RUTHERFORD, N. J., Sept. 1 — When was the last time a race track had to turn customers away because the place wasn't big enough to hold them all?

It happened tonight as New Jersey opened its state-owned Meadowlands track on reclaimed marshland only six miles from Midtown Manhattan. If a debut can be called too successful, tonight's harness-racing program struck that paradoxical description.

While protesting taxpayer groups picketed outside the gates with signs such as "Giants Play, We Pay," 42,133 patrons managed to find their way into a track that offers track seating for 10,000. New York's major harness-racing tracks, Yonkers and Roosevelt, normally draw 15,000 to 16,000 in tracks that can seat about 35,000.

Thousands of other horseplayers had to turn their cars around and leave the scene without betting a dime after the parking lots filled up half

HAYS, UNDER FIRE, QUITS HOUSE SEAT

Ohio Democrat Fails to Get Pledge That Members Will Take No Further Action

By RICHARD D. LYONS
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Sept. 1 — Representative Wayne L. Hays, under fire since the disclosure earlier this year of his sexual involvement with one of his employees, resigned today after 28 often controversial and sometimes colorful years of service in the House.

The Ohio Democrat sent letters to the House Speaker, Representative Carl Albert of Oklahoma, and Gov. James A. Rhodes of Ohio, stating: "I hereby resign my office as Representative in the Congress of the United States from the 18th District of Ohio, effective immediately."

The letters made no mention of the scandal that led to Mr. Hays's resignation or the charges by Elizabeth L. Ray, a former secretary, that Mr. Hays kept her on his Congressional payroll at $14,000 a year only to be his mistress.

Even before resigning, however, Mr. Hays lost yet another round by failing to secure a pledge that the House would take no further action against

Ford Asks Levi for Report On His Findings on Kelley

By JOHN M. CREWSON
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Sept. 1 — He would advise Mr. Ford to take a full report on Justice Department data suggesting that Clarence M. Kelley, the Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, may have misused Government services and property in his suburban apartment and accepted expensive gifts from subordinates.

The President made his request this morning in a brief telephone conversation with Attorney General Edward H. Levi, according to Ron Nessen, the White House press secretary. Mr. Nessen said that the President expected to have the report "within the next few days."

Mr. Levi told reporters that he was not familiar with all of the allegations against Mr. Kelley, and that he could therefore not say what action, if any,

President Gets Bill to Open Agency Sessions to Public

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, Sept. 1 — Some 50 Federal boards would be required to conduct most of their business in public under a "sunshine" bill that Congress has sent to President Ford. Mr. Ford has said that basically he agrees with the philosophy of such legislation.

The measure received final Congressional approval yesterday when both houses, which previously approved differing versions, passed a combined measure. The House vote was 384 to 0, while the Senate approved the measure by voice vote.

The bill, entitled Government in the Sunshine, also requires Federal boards to avoid off-the-record communications about cases put before them.

It covers about 50 boards and commissions, including the Securities and Exchange Commission, the Federal Communications Commission, the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal Power Commission.

Last February, President Ford said, "Basically I agree with the philosophy of the Sunshine bill." However, he added: "There may be some meetings held by agencies or departments in the Federal Government where there would have to be confidentiality maintained."

The boards would be required to announce meetings at least a week in advance. They would be allowed to close their meet-

VORSTER ASSAILS KISSINGER STAND

U.S.: Near, Spurs 'Moral Lessons and Threats'

By JOHN F. BURNS
Special to The New York Times

JOHANNESBURG, Sept. 1 — Prime Minister John Vorster reacted indignantly today to criticism of South Africa's racial policies, including a speech by Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger. He declared that "moral lessons and threats" from other countries would make no impression here.

"South Africa's internal and external policy is determined by South Africa itself and is not prescribed to her by any person or country from outside," Mr. Vorster said in a statement issued on the eve of his departure for Zurich, where he is to hold talks with Mr. Kissinger from Saturday to Monday.

'Dramatic Evidence'
The statement made no mention of Mr. Kissinger or of his speech in Philadelphia yesterday, in which he described apartheid—South Africa's system of racial separation—as "incompatible with human dignity." However, the context of the statement made it clear that his remarks were the primary target.

The Secretary of State, addressing a mostly black audience, said that the upheaval in black townships here, which has cost nearly 300 lives, was "dramatic evidence of the frustrations of black South Africans toward a system which denies them status and political rights."

The Vorster statement was also directed at Sam Nujoma, president of the South-West African People's Organization, which is conducting a guerrilla war against the South African authorities. It described as unacceptable recent comments by Mr. Nujoma calling for sanctions against South Africa.

The statement may also have

FORD AND CARTER TO MEET SEPT. 23 IN FIRST DEBATE

90-Minute Encounter Will Be Limited to Economic

SITE IS STILL UNCHOSEN

2 Other Confrontations Set —Dole and Mondale Also to Debate on Television

By JOSEPH LELYVELD
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Sept. 1 — President Ford and Jimmy Carter will debate domestic and economic issues for 90 minutes on national television Sept. 23 under an agreement reached here today by their representatives.

The encounter will be the first Presidential debate since John F. Kennedy and Richard M. Nixon went before the television cameras to face the voters 16 years ago. It will also be the first time that an incumbent President has ever debated an opponent.

Mr. Ford and Mr. Carter will have three debates in all. Under the agreement announced this afternoon by the League of Women Voters, their second debate will be confined to foreign policy and defense matters. The third was described as being "open to discussion on all issues."

Mondale-Dole Debate
In between the second and third Presidential debates, Senator Robert J. Dole and Walter F. Mondale are due to meet in the first televised debate ever held between Vice-Presidential candidates.

The locations of the four debates were still unsettled when the league announced this afternoon that the candidates had accepted its invitation to meet under its auspices. Unlike 1960, when the four Kennedy-Nixon debates were held in television studios, this year's encounters will be staged in hired halls before audiences invited by the local league chapters.

Representatives of the league said that audiences would be asked to "refrain from applause or comment."

The first of this year's debates will be half again as long as any of the 1960 debates, Continued on Page 26, Column 2

INDIA REGIME ASKS VAST NEW POWERS

Opposition Bitterly Protests
Bid to Change Constitution

By WILLIAM BORDERS
Special to The New York Times

NEW DELHI, Sept. 1 — With the small parliamentary opposition protesting bitterly, Prime Minister Indira Gandhi's Government today formally introduced a wide-ranging set of constitutional amendments that would give her sweeping new legislative powers.

The proposed amendments, still subject to debate and modification, would permit Parliament to ban "antination activities and associations," limit the judiciary's power to review legislation, and give the President, acting at the Prime Minister's behest, virtually unlimited power to amend the Constitution further.

"By these amendments, the judiciary is sought to be made impotent, and the Parliament utterly ineffective," declared H. M. Patel, the opposition leader, amid catcalls and heckling from Prime Minister Gandhi's supporters. "All the pillars of par-

Albany Plans Hatchery On a Contaminated Lake

By RICHARD SEVERO

New York State is planning to build a $10-million salmon hatchery on Lake Ontario to benefit sports fishermen, even though officials of the Department of Environmental Conservation have been warned for the last year by their own scientists and others that fish from the lake are not safe to eat because of excessive contamination with toxic chemicals, including Mirex.

The department itself acknowledges the danger. "The levels of Mirex in fish suggest that the amount of Mirex in Lake Ontario has reached unacceptable levels — that it's too high," said Dr. Ted Hullar, a departmental deputy commissioner. "People who would be eating fish should now have an added measure of caution." Despite this, Dr. Hullar said Tuesday night that the department had not changed any of its plans for building the hatchery. He explained that the department was presuming the contamination would one day disappear. But if it does not, he said, he hopes the hatchery's

Israelis Face Sharp Rise In Prices After Holidays

By WILLIAM E. FARRELL
Special to The New York Times

JERUSALEM, Sept. 1—Israelis, beset by rising inflation and the nation's leading commercial bank, says that the major cause of the protracted recession lies in "the balance-of-payments deficit accompanied by a marked drop in foreign-currency reserves."

The price increases are expected to go into effect in October, after the completion of Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur and the autumn holiday of Succoth. The increases affect a whole range of currently subsidized consumer essentials — bread, milk, eggs, margarine, cooking oil and chicken.

A complete removal of the subsidies, according to Government officials, could mean that the prices of these staples would increase by as much as 40 percent, a tremendous imposition on heavily taxed wage earners who are already feeling the crimp caused by the economic slowdown that became serious last year.

It is doubtful that the Government will permit such an onerous increase all at once. Instead, it is reported, Israeli officials will have to find an additional $40 million to keep the price increases at a more manageable level.

The Government is currently operating under a bare-bones budget with depleted reserves, and is facing the so-far unanswered question of where to find the subsidy funds to cushion the price increases. "Our major problem this year is a domestic one—the impact of inflation on the social fabric," one Israeli official said.

An economic analysis of the Israeli economy for 1975, published by the Bank Leumi le-Israel, the nation's leading commercial bank, says that the major cause of the protracted recession lies in "the balance-of-payments deficit accompanied by a marked drop in foreign-currency reserves."

"This problem," the report said, "has in fact been at the heart of Israel's economy since the establishment of the state, in 1948. The Government has been attempting with renewed vigor to promote the export of Israeli goods and to attract more foreign businesses. At the same time it is trying to curb consumer appetites for imported products."

According to the Bank Leumi analysis, this policy has at least stemmed a further deterioration of the balance-of-payments situation. The total deficit last year was nearly $4 billion.

Construction starts, a major economic bellwether here, were down in 1975 by 24 percent from 1974. According to the bank's economic appraisal, 1975 was the first year since 1967 in which the number of buildings completed exceeded the number of new housing starts. Despite the recession, unemployment here is low, a little over 3 percent.

The major single item in the Israeli budget is defense spending. The estimated defense budget for 1976 is $3.3 billion, or about 40 percent of the total budget. This year Israel will spend about 35 percent of its gross national product on defense-related items, an inordinately high amount when compared, for example, with the United States, which spends Anticipating a 17 percent rise in the cost of living, Israeli housewives hoarded food at supermarkets in Tel Aviv in 1974. Prices will rise even more next month.

about 8 percent of its G.N.P. on defense. This year, the report said, "would seem to be the first time since the establishment of the state that there will be a reduction in the means available for the provision of state services and development."

Lockheed Approaches To Two Legislators Reported by I

THE HAGUE, Sept. 1—The Lockheed Corporation approaches members of the Dutch Parliament to promote sale of Orion antimissile ships to the Dutch Navy, according to a report by a committee on defense identified as Joop van der Stoep.

The Dutch Cabinet pressed by Parliament day to clarify a brief to two unidentified Dutch legislators in a report by a committee on defense identified as Joop van der Stoep.

The documents said two legislators visited Lockheed's headquarters in California in May and were given information about the Orion, which the company is trying to replace its obsolete aircraft.

Neither man was available for comment today. I am a member of the North Atlantic Assembly.

Israelis Say Lebanese in South Beat Off Palestinians

TEL AVIV, Sept. 1—Armed Lebanese Christian villagers today beat off a renewed attack by Palestinian guerrillas close to the Israeli border, according to reports from the frontier area.

The target of the attack, the southern Lebanese village of Ain Ebel, was also reportedly assaulted by guerrillas on Monday, and in that encounter four guerrillas and three Lebanese were said to have been killed.

Villagers told Israelis that the Palestinians were apparently trying to disrupt growing cooperation between Israeli and southern Lebanese. The villagers said they were being harassed because they had accepted medical aid at an Israeli frontier clinic, taken job in Israeli forestation projects, bought food in Israel and visited relatives across the border.

Reports from the border said the guerrillas were not having any effect on the number of Lebanese visiting the border area. Israel's Defense Minister, Shimon Peres, reported on today's fighting at Ain Ebel at a luncheon of representatives of the United Jewish Appeal near Jerusalem. He expressed confidence that the villagers were sufficiently equipped to take care of themselves.

Israel Pledge Reported
BEIRUT, Lebanon, Sept. 1—Beirut newspapers today gave prominence to reports that the residents of Ain Ebel had received assurances of aid from the Israelis in the event of reprisals by Palestinians.

Lebanese leftist sources said the commander of the guerrilla forces in southern Lebanon, Maj. Abu Mussa, had ordered his men to use restraint so that there would be no pretext for Israeli intervention in the border area.

Meanwhile, attention was focused here on a statement by the Damascus radio that the Syrian role in Lebanon, where Syria has 20,000 troops, would continue until the Lebanese crisis was over. The broadcast was reporting on the discussions on future Syrian-Lebanese relations held yesterday in Damascus between the Lebanese President-elect, Elias Sarkis, and the Syrian President, Hafez al-Assad.

U.S. Envoys in Junieh
JUNIEH, Lebanon, Sept. 1 (UPI)—Two United States diplomats, Robert B. Houghton and David Mack, returned today to this Lebanese Christian port north of Beirut for new talks with right-wing Christian leaders. They arrived by ship from Cyprus, where they said, they had received new instructions from the State Department.

MARTIAL LAW LIFTED IN BURMESE CAPITAL

RANGOON, Burma, Sept. 1 (AP)—The Burmese Government today announced the end of the martial law that was imposed in Rangoon in December 1974 during the student riots over funeral ceremonies for the United Nations Secretary General, U Thant.

The students took Mr. Thant's body from a family burial ceremony attended by 50,000 mourners and demanded a special funeral site and the construction of an official mausoleum.

The police and troops recovered the body during disturbances in which nine persons were reported to have been killed and 74 wounded. As the trouble spread, the Government declared martial law and placed Rangoon under curfew.

The body ultimately was placed in a Rangoon mausoleum built by Mr. Thant's family. Last week the Government ordered the phased release of nearly 1,800 people and reductions in the sentences of 3,300 convicted by military courts during the period of martial law.

Uruguay's New President Ends Rights of Thousands

MONTEVIDEO, Uruguay, Sept. 1—Uruguay's military regime today installed as President a conservative lawyer, Aparicio Méndez, who immediately canceled the political rights of the leaders of all existing parties. The sweeping decree denies for 15 years the right of thousands of political figures, including former President Juan María Bordaberry, to be elected or to hold public office. Mr. Méndez, a 72-year-old constitutional lawyer, was the choice of Uruguay's senior military officers to replace Mr. Bordaberry, who was elected in 1971 but closed Congress in 1973 and governed with military backing. Mr. Bordaberry was forced to resign June 12 after a disagreement with the military chiefs, who announced publicly that they had withdrawn their support of him. He was replaced provisionally by Alberto Demichelli, the 80-year-old president of the Council of State, a 27-member body created to replace the Congress dissolved by Mr. Bordaberry. Military Demand Resisted But Mr. Demichelli reportedly refused to issue the decree demanded by the military that abolishes the leadership of all the traditional Uruguayan political parties, from the outlawed Communist Party to the moderate Colorado and National parties. So Mr. Méndez was chosen to carry out this task as a condition for becoming President for a five-year term. Among those whose political rights were suspended was Walter Ferreira Aldunate, the presidential candidate of the National Party against Mr. Bordaberry in 1971. Mr. Ferreira Aldunate, who was supported then by Mr. Méndez, a National Party member, is now in exile. All candidates of the left-wing Broad Front who ran in 1971 on the ticket headed by Gen. Liber Seregni, now in jail, were banned. So were former President Jorge Pacheco Areco of the Colorado Party, elected in 1968, and Jorge Batlle, the candidate of the principal Colorado Party faction in 1971. Ban Is Called Punishment The decree said that the ban, which affects all the party structure existing before Congress was closed, was punishment for "the subversion and inertia of the political parties that led to shedding of innocent blood, limitation of liberties, collapse of security and administrative chaos." The banishment of the old political class was necessary, it declared, to "prepare for the incorporation of new generations to political life through the traditional parties," but there was no indication when the parties, now declared in recess, would be allowed to function. The Congress was closed in 1973 because the military considered the legislators an obstacle to a drastic campaign against the left-wing Tupamaro guerrillas, who have since been virtually destroyed. Subsequently, the military applied repressive measures against members of the Communist and Christian Democratic Parties, rights were suspended and considered "subversives."

Argentine Junta Is Planning Drive to Revive Country

ARGENTINE Sept. 1—The military junta that took power in Buenos Aires five months ago is planning a drive to revive the country's economy and to expand exports. As wages have gone down, therefore, the prices of cattle, grain and other basic farm exports have gone up, adding to the cost of food for Argentines. At a model market here in the capital, Albino López, a poultry butcher, tried to explain to an irate customer why the price of chicken had gone up to 220 pesos a kilo (40 cents a pound) from 160 pesos a month ago. "We are now exporting chickens," he said. "They said in the newspaper that 20 tons were sold to some Middle Eastern country for a dollar a kilo." The housewife, who would not be mollified, said, "They are going to export me pretty soon at these prices." Recession Seen Waning Mr. Martínez de Hoz, Minister of the Economy in a previous military government, who has extensive business experience, is confident that the worst of the industrial recession passed in July. He said there would be no large-scale unemployment, which is now at 7 percent of the labor force. "Workers have understood that they had to accept a wage sacrifice or lose their jobs," he said. "They have accepted the most sensible course." As long as recession and wage cuts continue to affect labor, it is unlikely that the junta will be able to restore unions to more than token status. Many prominent Peronist union leaders are in jail and other radical factory delegates have been arrested or killed by armed forces. Gen. Horacio Tomás, however, Gen. Horacio Tomás pushing for a restrictive decree.

Regime Asks Indian Parliament for Vast New Powers

liamentary democracy are being converted into plant tools of an all-powerful executive.

After a tumultuous 45-minute discussion of the bill, Mr. Patel rose and led his several followers out of the ornate, green-carpeted chamber, to begin what he said was likely to be a long boycott.

"For opposition members to continue to participate is to give a semblance of constitutional legitimacy to the Government's move to throttle democracy and impose authoritarian rule," Mr. Patel said.

Although the opposition members have boycotted Parliament off and on during the 14 months since the Government assumed sweeping emergency powers, Mr. Patel this time set the most stringent conditions so far for their return.

Stiff Opposition Demands

He said that the Government must allow free reporting of parliamentary debate, accounts of which are now subject to the same rigid censorship as all other news, and that it must release the three dozen members of Parliament who are in jail among the thousands of political prisoners.

"No parliament in any democratic country can continue to claim legitimacy if most of its leading opposition members and important dissenters of the ruling party are kept behind bars," Mr. Patel asserted.

While he and a few other opposition leaders were recording their stinging objections to what one of them called "constitutional dictatorship," Prime Minister Gandhi sat in her regular front-row seat just across the floor, reading official reports from an orange cardboard folder, now and then looking up to listen for a moment or two while she toyed with her gold ballpoint pen.

Minister of Law H. R. Gokhale, defying the omnibus constitutional amendment bill, said that its enactment would make it easier for the Government to achieve "the objective of socio-economic revolution, which would end poverty and ignorance and disease and inequality of opportunity."

"The democratic institutions provided in the Constitution are basically sound," Mr. Gokhale declared, but "a constitution, to be living, must be growing."

Section Evokes Anger

The aspect of the bill that seemed to arouse the most vehement opposition was the section giving the President, presently Fakhruddin Ahmed, the apparently unlimited right to "make such provisions, including any adaptation or modification of any provision of the Constitution, as appear to him to be necessary" to carry out the omnibus legislation.

The President has a role that, though largely ceremonial, has been central to India's drift toward authoritarianism. It was Mr. Ahmed, for example, who actually declared the state of emergency in June of 1975.

In the parliamentary tradition, he has acted in the direction of the Prime Minister. But one amendment introduced today specifies that relationship with these words:

"There shall be a Council of Ministers, with the Prime Minister at the head, to aid and advise the President, who shall, in the exercise of his functions, act in accordance with such advice."

The bill would also permit the courts to review whether the procedure of a constitutional amendment had been proper, but not to review its substance.

The Supreme Court would still be permitted, by a two-thirds majority, to declare a federal law unconstitutional, but that power would be taken away from all the lower courts.

The bill would also extend for a year the term of Parliament, which is now five years, and lists the "fundamental duties" of citizenship, including the duty "to protect the sovereignty, unity and integrity of India."

The draft amendments were introduced just as Parliament was about to adjourn. But they will be taken up again at a special session that is to begin in October. Because of the Government's lopsided majority, the bill was considered certain to be enacted.

Canada Raises Postage For First Time

OTTAWA, Sept. 1. Basic domestic postage rates for first-class mail came into effect today. The previous 8 cents for one ounce is scheduled next year as an effort to cut a postal deficit of $1.5 billion annually.

The current rate of 10 cents for first-class mail to the United States changed, but will go up to 12 cents for postal officials said.

Newly United Country Says That Assent Would Help to 'Normalize' Relations

By PAUL HOFMANN

Special to The New York Times
 UNITED NATIONS, N. Y., Sept. 1.—Vietnam appealed to the United States today not to veto its application for membership in the United Nations, and said American acquiescence to its admission would improve the atmosphere for talks between Hanoi and Washington to "normalize" relations.

Next week the Security Council is to consider a membership application that the Communist Government of re-united Vietnam submitted Aug. 20.

The permanent observer of the Hanoi Government at the United Nations, Dinh Ba Thi, called on the United States at a press conference today to act in the 15-nation Council in accordance with the United Nations Charter and the "traditions of freedom and justice of the American people."

Speech Moderate in Tone

Moderate in tone, the Vietnamese representative also stressed that direct contacts between his Government and Washington would greatly help to solve the unsettled questions of Americans missing in action and of American assistance in his country's postwar reconstruction.

The United States used its veto power in the Security Council last year to block applications by North Vietnam and South Vietnam for membership. The two countries merged this year after elections.

The United States said last year it was blocking admission of the two Vietnams because the Security Council had refused even to consider South Korea's application for United Nations membership. North Korea has submitted no request to become a member.

The Vietnamese representative said today the explanation for the American vetoes against North Vietnam and South Vietnam had been an "absolute pretext." He added his Government had so far received no indication on how the United States would vote in the Council this time.

American officials refused to comment on the United States position in next week's debate on Vietnam. Sources close to the Administration are speculating that the United States attitude may depend on a last-minute signal from Hanoi holding out hope for progress in efforts to settle the problem of Americans missing in action.

Libyan Asks Talks With 2 Arab Chiefs To Settle Disputes

Special to The New York Times

CAIRO, Thursday, Sept. 2.—Col. Muammar el-Qaddafi of Libya called early this morning for a meeting of the Presidents of Egypt, Libya and Syria to try to settle their differences.

Mr. Qaddafi, who began a long speech last night during celebrations of the seventh anniversary of the ouster of King Idris, repeatedly criticized President Anwar el-Sadat of Egypt. Earlier this summer, Colonel Qaddafi had threatened to break relations with Egypt if there was not some improvement in a feud between the two countries.

Colonel Qaddafi's speech was broadcast by the Tripoli radio. According to unofficial translations, the Libyan leader demanded that President Sadat get out of his "ivory tower" and recall his past. However, he said there was nothing personal between him and the Egyptian President.

A council composed of Presidents Qaddafi, Sadat, and Hafez al-Assad of Syria heads the federation of Arab Republics organized in 1971.

The federation exists mainly on paper. With President Sadat not on speaking terms with either of the other presidents, it seemed unlikely here this morning that there would be a meeting such as the one proposed by Colonel Qaddafi.

However, the foreign ministers of the Arab League countries are scheduled to meet in Cairo on Saturday to discuss a conference of the 20 Arab heads of state.

Relations between Libya and Egypt have been extremely tense this summer, with Egypt accusing Libya of backing a series of terrorist attacks culminating in the hijacking of an Egyptian airliner last week. The hijackers, allegedly paid by Libya, were overcome by Egyptian commandos while the hijacked plane was on a runway in Luxor.

President Sadat has rejected calls from other Arab countries that he negotiate with Colonel Qaddafi.

In an interview this week with the French newspaper Le Monde, President Qaddafi said that President Sadat was "playing with fire" by a troop concentration on the border with Libya.

He said that Algeria would back Libya in case of a conflict with Egypt and asserted that a coup in Libya, even if supported by Egypt, would be "impossible."

The Kissinger Trip:
U.S. Goals in Africa

By BERNARD GWERTZMAN

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Sept. 1 — Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger departs on Friday for a meeting in Zurich with Prime Minister John Vorster of South Africa that may turn out to be a prelude to a longer Kissinger trip to southern Africa next week. Some questions and answers on the subject follow:

Q. Why is Mr. Kissinger seeing Mr. Vorster again? Does it have something to do with the racial disorders in South Africa?

A. Mr. Kissinger has kept the details leading up to the meeting secret, but has said enough to indicate that he is not seeing Mr. Vorster to complain about South Africa's apartheid policies, although he is sure to mention that most Americans find them repugnant. Rather, the meeting has more to do with Mr. Kissinger's intensive efforts to bring about political changes in Rhodesia and South-West Africa.

Q. What does Mr. Kissinger want to happen in Rhodesia?

A. The regime of Prime Minister Ian D. Smith broke away from Britain in 1965 and has been regarded as "illegal" by the United Nations, since then. Various British proposals to persuade the whites in Rhodesia to negotiate a formula leading to majority rule — meaning black assumption of power — have failed. Now, fearing that the stepped-up guerrilla war in Rhodesia mounted largely from neighboring Mozambique might flare up into a race war and possible Soviet involvement, Mr. Kissinger has taken the lead in urging that black African states, South Africa, Britain, the United States and other Western powers agree on a formula that would lead to a change in Rhodesia.

Q. What can Mr. Vorster do?

A. Mr. Vorster can do a great deal since South Africa now provides Rhodesia with its only link to the sea, is its primary trade partner and is a potential military ally in case of war. South Africa could cripple Rhodesia by closing its borders to it.

Is Mr. Vorster likely to take such a step?

A. No. South Africa opposes economic sanctions since it is being threatened with them itself because of South-West Africa. But South Africa does not support the Smith regime's policies and endorsed majority rule in Rhodesia as recently as a few weeks ago. Mr. Kissinger would like Mr. Vorster to urge Mr. Smith to accept the "inevitable" and agree in principle to majority rule in two years.

Q. What does Mr. Kissinger want to happen in South-West Africa?

A. South-West Africa, now also known as Namibia, was at the end of World War I a German colony that was entrusted by the League of Nations to South Africa as a trust territory. In the late 1950's the United Nations withdrew the mandate and last January ordered South Africa to declare acceptance of free elections there under United Nations supervision and control. The Security Council is scheduled to discuss the problem when Mr. Kissinger returns from his trip. The South Africans created a biracial commission that last week called for independence by Dec. 31, 1978, but nothing has been said of elections or the participation of the leading black guerrilla group, the South-West Africa People's Organization. Mr. Kissinger would like Mr. Vorster to call for elections and allow the organization to participate.

Q. Is Mr. Vorster likely to agree to further steps on South-West Africa?

A. Probably. Since the South Africans are now committed to its independence, they could accede to elections and to the South-West Africa People's Organization without too much trouble.

Q. But doesn't South

The Moscow-backed Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola was victor in a year's civil war. Fearing Communist penetration into Rhodesia, South-West Africa, Secretary of State Kissinger has persuaded President Ford to strengthen United States influence in those countries.

Africa itself have a Government ruled by a white minority?

A. Yes.

Q. So why should it do anything to alter the system in Rhodesia and South-West Africa?

A. For very pragmatic reasons. The white South Africans for years have judged the Rhodesian situation precarious for whites and fear that a major war could involve outside powers, and lead to chaos in Africa and major disorders in South Africa. They would prefer time to develop "disten- tention" with black African states that deal with them, and proceed with independence for the black homelands of South Africa, thereby decreasing the black "majority" in the country. And South-West Africa at the moment seems more an irritant than a major problem. Resolution of these issues, they hope, would reduce pressure on them.

Q. Does Mr. Kissinger want an end to apartheid in South Africa—the policy of legal separation of the races?

A. Yes. At least he says he does. But despite his words of moral outrage against South African policies, Mr. Kissinger seems willing to let the South African situation await action as long as progress is made on Rhodesia and South-West Africa.

Q. The Rhodesian and South-West African problems have been well-known for more than decades. Why has Mr. Kissinger suddenly seemed to have become interested in them?

A. Mr. Kissinger paid little attention to Africa until last year when a number of events came together. The decision by Portugal to grant independence to Angola touched off a civil war in which the Soviet Union and Cuba backed the winners and the United States the losers.

Mr. Kissinger saw the specter of Communist support turning the tide of battle in Rhodesia, South-West Africa and even penetrating into South Africa. Loss of these territories by the West would be disastrous, not only politically but also economically and strategically, given the rich mineral resources of those countries and their location at the tip of Africa.

Q. Since Britain was already charged with the Rhodesian problem, and the United States with South-West Africa, why didn't the United States leave the problem to the British?

A. The Americans may have no leverage with the white Rhodesians, appeared ready in the past to disassociate themselves from the problem. And several members of the United Nations ready to call for economic sanctions against South Africa. South-West Africa did not receive independence soon.

Q. Has the new American policy worked?

A. Certainly, the American decision has been felt. Mr. Kissinger visited the black states of the area in May, and conferred with Vorster in Bavia. In other officials have stepped back and forth. And Mr. Kissinger has given high priority to the African issue.

Q. Does Mr. Ford's policy gain politically?

A. If Mr. Kissinger gets a spectacular accord—an agreement on Rhodesia before November, Mr. Ford probably benefits. But the odds of failure are high, and would not rebound to Ford's credit.

ended to cover a speech Security Council yesterday speech, by the de-Madagascar on behalf African nations, was critical of South Af-ante as the Council met to consider South Afincompliance with the deadline set for South agreement to United supervised elections

leading to the independence of South-West Africa.
South Africa is backing an alternative plan, under which a bimultiracial government drawn from the territory's 11 ethnic groups would take over from the present white administration and lead the territory to independence by the end of 1978. The Council is scheduled to meet again on South-West Africa on Sept. 22.
Mr. Vorster's statement in-day read as follows:
"Because so much is at stake for South Africa and southern Africa, I do not wish to comment on reports of what has been said in the past day or two, or on what has happened, because experience has taught me that first reports are not always correct and because I wish to go to the discussions in Zurich in all sincerity and with an open mind.

"I am however compelled, in order to avoid misunderstanding, to draw attention to the following:
"1. South Africa's internal and external policy is determined by South Africa itself and is not prescribed to her by any person or country from outside.
"2. South Africa accepts the internal and external policy of every other country as its own leaders state it, does not interfere with this and does not prescribe to other countries what it should be or how they should solve their problems.

"3. South Africa does not accept the United Nations or a caucus thereof as a superparliament which can prescribe to her or any country how to organize its affairs. It is therefore for South Africa all the more unacceptable that Sam Nujoma wishes to dictate to the Security Council how and when action should be taken against South Africa.
"4. South Africa has given abundant proof of its honest attempts to create a climate within which peace can be found for our subcontinent and will still continue with these efforts. Moral lessons and threats from certain African and other countries will, as far as this is concerned, make no impression on us and will not force us from this course."

The statement was the first public criticism Mr. Vorster has made of Mr. Kissinger since high-level talks between the two countries began in May.
Despite reservations that the South African leader is said to have expressed in private about the pressures being brought to bear on him by the Secretary of State, his public pronoun-ments since their first meeting in West Germany on June 23 and 24, have been devoid of rancor.
The Prime Minister was said to feel now that Mr. Kissinger's remarks in Philadelphia, however necessary from the viewpoint of domestic politics, had amounted to a major provocation that could not go unanswered. The remarks received headline treatment in the newspapers here.

The primary aim of the Zurich talks is to devise peaceful resolutions of the conflicts in Rhodesia and South-West Africa. The South Africans have indicated willingness to support moves toward control by the black majorities in both territories but have insisted that dominance by the white minority in South Africa will be maintained.
Shortly before Mr. Vorster's statement was issued, his office announced that he would meet on Oct. 8 with the leaders of the nine tribal homelands, which are a cornerstone of the apartheid policy. The meeting was demanded by seven of the nine homelands when their representatives conferred in Johannesburg 12 days ago and issued a statement for its suppression of disorders in black townships around the nation.

The leaders will lay before the Prime Minister a number of demands, including free and compulsory education for blacks, the abolition of laws restricting the movement of blacks between the homelands and the townships, and a national conference to discuss the unrest, which would be attended by many of the radical leaders the Government has detained.

Most of the black townships were reported to be quiet today after a month in which scarcely a day passed without reports of shooting incidents involving policemen and demonstrators.
The police used tear gas and staves to disperse a crowd of several hundred youths, mostly in school uniforms, who were stoning cars in a township in Cape Town reserved for colored, people of mixed ethnic background. In another Cape Town incident about 200 young blacks marched through the center of the city in a peaceful protest.

Irish Parliament Approves Declaration of Emergency

Special to The New York Times
DUBLIN, Sept. 1—The Irish Parliament tonight approved the declaration of a state of emergency sought by Prime Minister Liam Cosgrave to enable the Government to deal with the Irish Republican Army.

The state of emergency, which is effective immediately and will last indefinitely, enabled Mr. Cosgrave's Government to put before Parliament controversial emergency powers legislation permitting the detention of suspected terrorists without charges for up to seven days instead of the maximum of two days that the Constitution now permits.

The measure instituting a state of emergency was approved in the lower house by a vote of 70 to 65 and then by the Senate in a 35-to-18 vote. The bill permitting seven-day detention came before Parliament immediately upon the declaration of the emergency. Further legislation, a criminal law bill that would provide for much stiffer sentences for membership in the I.R.A., establish a maximum 10-year prison sentence for "incitement to join" the outlawed organization and involve military personnel in a police role is expected to follow.

Although Prime Minister Cosgrave was confident that all the anti-terrorist legislation would be enacted, a number of political figures here, several newspapers and the Irish Council for Liberties expressed strong misgivings about the strong measures.

Tonight two Labor Members of Parliament who normally support the Government abstained in the vote on the emergency. Two other members who are considered supporters of the Opposition were absent because of illness. Their attendance at the later votes could reduce the Government majority to three, but it was expected that all the proposed measures would go through.

Pledge by Cosgrave

Concluding tonight's debate, Mr. Cosgrave declared that the new powers would not be abused. He pointed out that the public held the ultimate sanction of voting him out of office if it wished, in the general election that must be held by March, 1978.

Referring to the additional role being given to the army, he recalled that a similar step was taken by the Opposition Fianna Fail Party when it held power during World War II. "There was no suggestion that the army was being let loose on the natives," he said.

The emergency measures, he went on, are not directed at people attending drawing room parties, symphony concerts and picture galleries, but at sophisticated criminals.

Mr. Cosgrave has asserted that the emergency power the Government was most interested in was the seven-day detention authorization. He said that the extended time period was crucial for the police, who found two days inadequate for questioning suspected terrorists.

Most opposition speakers in the two-day debate joined the Government members in condemning the I.R.A. But they argued that the emergency was an extreme overreaction, designed to prepare for a snap election, to divert attention from the critical state of the economy and to disguise the Government's lack of a serious policy on Northern Ireland.

Similarity to British Policy Seen

Opposition elements in Dublin, and in Northern Ireland, have been quick to accuse the Irish Government, in proposing seven-day detention, of embarking on a path similar to that taken by Britain in Northern Ireland.

Civil libertarians and politicians centered their opposition on the precedent that the state of emergency created and said that Mr. Cosgrave had failed to show conclusively that the Dublin Government was facing a security threat. Moreover, former Prime Minister John Lynch, the leader of the Fianna Fail Party, said that the state of emergency undermined investment, industry, employment prospects and tourism, and gave the Irish Republican Army the status it was seeking, that of being a major threat to the state.

"There doesn't appear to be a state of emergency in reality in this part of the country," said The Irish Press, an opposition morning newspaper. "Yet a coach and four is to be rammed through the Constitution. This is a dangerous and unnecessary initiative."

The newly formed Irish Council of Civil Liberties, consisting largely of academic figures, said it emphatically opposed the legislation providing for emergency powers as well as some aspects of the extension of penalties.

"The declaration of a state of emergency is very much more than a recognition of disturbed conditions in society at home and abroad," the group said in a statement.

"It has a precise consequence in law, the effect of which is to suspend recourse in the Constitution, implicit in the proposal, is the assumption that the state faces a clear, present, direct and overwhelming threat to their very existence. No lesser conditions could justify such an exceptional suspension of civil liberties."

"The onus is on the Government to provide that justification but, to date, no such justification has been forthcoming," Prime Minister Cosgrave, in a speech to Parliament yesterday, asserted that two recent events had made the emergency measures necessary. One was an explosion on July 15 at a special criminal court building in Dublin used for I.R.A. suspects. The other was the killing of the British Ambassador to Dublin, Christopher Ewart-Biggs, and Judith Cooke, a civil servant. They died on July 21 when a bomb was detonated beneath the diplomat's car.

Gerard Collins, the Opposition spokesman on justice, said that the two incidents represented failures in security by the Irish police and that the Government was creating a "panic situation" by declaring a state of emergency that he termed completely unnecessary. "This is a phony state of emergency," he asserted. "It is a window-dressing operation, motivation for which is political."

The prestigious Irish Times was critical of Mr. Cosgrave in an editorial this morning, declaring that his "failure to come to grips with responsible fears about the emergency showed a measure of contempt for public feelings."

U.S. REDUCES PLAN ON SAUDI MISSILES

WASHINGTON, Sept. 1 (AP)—In a substantial reduction of its original request, the Ford Administration asked Congress today to permit the sale of 850 Sidewinder and 650 Maverick missiles to Saudi Arabia.

The original intention had been to sell the Saudis 2,000 Sidewinders and 1,500 Maverick missiles.

The reaction to the new move was cautious on Capitol Hill. Senator William Proxmire, Democrat of Wisconsin, threatened to block all weapons sales to Saudi Arabia and to Iran and Pakistan as well.

The request for Saudi Arabia came as part of the Administration's $6 billion arms package submitted to Congress. The major share of the weapons was for Iran.

The biggest single item was for 150 F-16 fighter planes armed with Phoenix missiles, and 10 trainers to be delivered to Iran at a cost of about $4.8 billion. Under recently enacted legislation, Congress has 30 days to disapprove the deals. Included in the package was $137 million in planes, missiles and tanks for South Korea, as well as $490 million in orders from Israel, mostly for helicopters.

REPORT ON KELLEY SOUGHT BY FORD

Professional Responsibility, the staff is investigating alleged improprieties.
In summary, he said, in a recommendation by Sullivan and one by John Ford, his principal investigator, but he declined to say the recommendations.

Kelley confirmed in a statement yesterday that metal and wooden window sashes had been built for his pent by the bureau's execution in 1973, shortly he became director, and he had accepted a number of gifts from bureau executives.

Justice Department said today that the gifts included a walnut table, a chair and a total of several hundred dollars.

Kelley said in the statement that he considered the gifts to be Federal property and had been lent to him, that he would reimburse the bureau for the cost of the valances and "make restitution" for the gifts found to be

Federal statutes provide penalties for the unauthorized conversion of Government property to an individual's use, and for the disbursement of Government funds to an official who accepts subordinates gifts of more than minimal value.

Justice Department said today, however, that it had thought had been to whether Mr. Kelley, in failing to reimburse the government for the valances, had violated Federal law. The source said that he expected Mr. Levi's report to identify Ford to contain an account of Mr. Kelley's conduct, if any.

Information Traced
The source also said that the Department's information about the construction of the window frames—wooden frames attached to the top of a window with a drapery hanging—had come from John P. Dunphy, the head of the bureau's execution section, a part of the laboratory, is normally used in building displays of crime scenes for Federal court proceedings.

Dunphy pleaded guilty in 1974 to a charge that he had sold less than $100 worth of government-owned lumber to a birdhouse at his Maryland home. Part of the agreement with Justice Department prosecutors, as there said today, was that he would testify before a grand jury about other aspects of the exhibits section.

The source said that the Justice Department had received photographs of several projects undertaken by carpenters for bureau executives, but not of Mr. Kelley's, and that those photographs and Mr. Dunphy's testimony were "at the center of the case of fraud" that ultimately touch a number of individuals.

In addition to the inquiry into misuses of bureau funds, the Justice Department is conducting a separate inquiry into illegal burglaries out by bureau agents in the past several years.

Levi said today, however, that it was "important to recognize that I think he [Mr. Kelley] had been doing an excellent job of guiding the bureau through the investigations, and indicated that his belief was a factor in his recommendation to the President.

"Stay and Fight"
An associate of Mr. Kelley spoke with him yesterday and said that the director had no indication that he was resigning a voluntary resignation or any other course of action except to "stay and associate and others, expressed dismay at what they perceived as the relatively sequential nature of the investigations that has reportedly assembled against Mr. Kelley. "I can't believe they're going to let him go over a couple of valances," one said.

Senior officials of the bureau previously reported that at Hoover, the bureau's director, used the F.B.I. story and exhibits section to form a number of modifications to his Washington office and accepted expensive gifts several times a year from former official has said that he had built a porch for the Hoover and built a fish pond in his yard, and that laboratory technicians performed modifications on the director's television set and installed some home fixtures.

official also said that gifts were taken from bureau executives several times a year to provide Mr. Hoover with gifts at Christmas and on other occasions, and that the gifts generally cost several hundred dollars.

Levi was asked today about his personal policy on accepting gifts from subordinates. He replied that, as a rule, he tried not to accept gifts from employees.

He added, however, that he had been unable to avoid receiving some presents, including links, but he said that they were worth nowhere near the value of the presents accepted by Mr. Kelley.

sales price over $35,000 instead of $20,000 at present for these persons. Younger persons have never had any special exemption.

The conferees made considerable progress today in settling numerous matters, most of them minor. However, when they adjourned shortly after 3 P.M., it was generally agreed that they could not finish work on the bill by tomorrow, as had been the aim of the committee chairman, Representative Al Ullman, Democrat of Oregon.

Thus, work on the bill will have to be completed after the Congressional Labor Day recess, with work resuming next week.

Mr. Ullman also said tonight that the House conferees could not negotiate on the politically sensitive issue of the estate and gift tax as part of this bill. The House is snarled on this question, and Senator Russell B. Long, Democrat of Louisiana, who is chairman of the Senate conferees, tacitly conceded that the estate tax relief provisions enacted by the Senate would have to be dropped from the revised bill.

Among the provisions agreed upon today was a compromise that cut in half a proposed tax benefit for shipbuilding added by the Senate. The issue was whether the investment tax credit should apply to ships, which already have other benefits, and the conferees agreed to give half the normal credit of 10 percent starting this year.

The agreed provision on the Arab boycott would take away certain tax benefits to companies that comply with the boycott, according to the ratio of their business with the boycotting countries to their total business. Thus, if 10 percent of a company's "sales or purchases of goods and services [for other transactions]" were with the Arab countries engaged in the boycott, 10 percent of the tax benefits would be denied.

The benefits in question are the foreign tax credit, deferral of taxation on foreign earnings and tax benefits for exports from the United States.

Herman J. Schmidt, vice chairman of the Mobil Oil Corporation, wrote the conferees yesterday that the legislation "threatens to jeopardize the security of United States crude oil supplies from major producing countries." He said the new provisions "could make the United States reliant on not only foreign countries, but foreign companies," and added that it "could be considered an unfriendly act toward countries such as Saudi Arabia." It "could result in retaliatory action against the United States," he wrote.

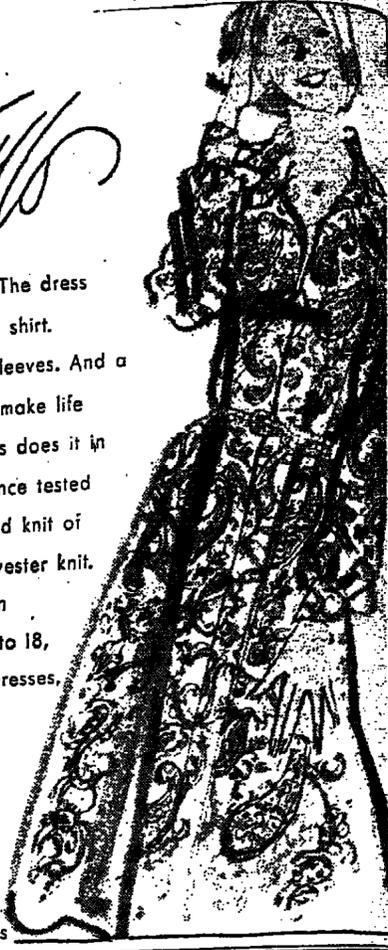

However, Congress seems determined to act against the boycott in one way or another this year. Yesterday, the House International Relations Committee voted, as part of an extension of the Export Administration Act, to make compliance with the boycott illegal for United States companies.

Freeze on Rates Voted

WASHINGTON, Sept. 1 (AP)—Congress acted today to protect workers against higher taxes for another two weeks. The House, by voice vote, completed Congressional action on a two-week freeze of personal tax-withholding rates. That sent the stop-gap measure to President Ford.

his inquiry into charges that Mr. Hays had illegally placed old friends, as well as his mis- tress, on the payrolls of com- mittees that he once headed.

At first, the 65-year-old Rep- resentative denied Miss Ray's allegation. Later, he said that they had had an affair, but insisted that she had performed secretarial duties.

"The only thing I'm guilty of is a little foolishness," he said at the time.

Mr. Flynt said the investiga- tion material is the property of the House, rather than that of the committee, and that it would be up to the House to decide whether to make it pub- lic.

Mr. Hays continues to be under investigation by both the Justice Department and a federal grand jury. He is also the target of a civil suit charging that through the hiring, he had violated provisions of the Federal False Claims Act. The later suit seeks restitution by Mr. Hays of Federal funds allegedly fraudulently paid as Congressional salaries.

By virtue of his service in the House, plus brief Army duty during World War II, Mr. Hays is eligible for a pension of about $30,000 a year.

Ouster Move Rejected
WASHINGTON, Sept. 1 (UPI)—The House ethics committee voted 10 to 2 today to reject a resolution calling for the expulsion of Representative Andrew J. Hinshaw, Republican of California, from the House of Representatives.

The expulsion resolution was brought before the ethics panel by Representative Charles E. Wiggins, Republican of California, after Mr. Hinshaw's conviction last Jan. 26 by a California court of two counts of taking bribes when he was the Orange County tax assessor.

Gov. James A. Rhodes of Ohio reporting in Columbus that Representative Wayne L. Hays would resign from Congress.

Mr. Flynt, the committee chairman, said the panel decided that, since the offenses were committed while Mr. Hinshaw was not a member of the House and because his appeal from the conviction was pending in a higher court, the committee felt no action should be taken.

Mr. Hinshaw was convicted of accepting stereo equipment and a $1,000 campaign contribution from the Tandy Corporation, which operates, among other businesses, the Radio Shack chain of stereo and other electronic equipment.

Mr. Wiggins can still bring his resolution before the full House, but it was not immediately known what action he would take.

U.S. Will Try Gurney Again For Perjury in Influence Case

ORLANDO, Fla., Sept. 1 (AP)—The United States Government dropped a conspiracy charge against former Senator Edward J. Gurney today, but said it would re-try him Oct. 4 on a perjury count in an alleged influence-peddling scheme.

The announcement was made by a Federal prosecutor, Vincent Alto, in a pretrial hearing before Federal District Judge George C. Young.

The Government had been expected to drop both counts, but Mr. Alto said, "This is the direction of Justice Department officials in Washington."

The two counts were left from a seven-count Federal indictment handed down by a Jacksonville grand jury on July 11, 1974. After a five-month trial in Tampa last year, the 62-year-old Mr. Gurney was acquitted of three perjury charges, one bribery count and one charge of accepting unlaw- ful compensation.

The jury was deadlocked on the two remaining counts. The perjury count alleges that Mr. Gurney, a Republican from Winter Park, lied to the grand jury about the date he learned of illegal fund-raising activities by an aide, Larry E. Williams.

Mr. Gurney's attorney, C. Harris Dittmar, argued that it was illegal for the Government to take a part of the grand jury indictment before a new trial jury to try to convict Mr. Gurney.

Mr. Gurney declined comment as he left the courtroom, but he said later that he was "shocked and surprised" at the Government move.

Mr. Alto said the conspiracy charge was being dropped be- cause "admissible evidence leaves less than a prima facie case against the defendant."

He referred to a recent ruling by Judge Young that the main body of testimony from the previous trial could not be used again.

The original indictment alleged that Mr. Gurney took part in a scheme to put pressure on Florida builders for financial contributions in return for favors from Federal housing agencies. It also charged that Mr. Gurney tried to cover up the scheme by lying to a grand jury.

The indictment said $233,000 was collected in kickbacks from housing contractors. Trial testimony and Government claims put the total at more than $450,000.

Mr. Gurney, who gained prominence as a defender of President Nixon during the televised Senate Watergate hearings, was the first senator indicted in office in 50 years. He decided not to seek re-election in 1974 shortly after the charges were made.

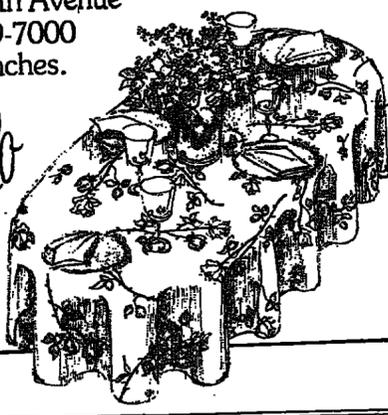

The case against Mr. Gurney focused on the activities of Mr. Williams, who testified that he shook down Florida builders in Mr. Gurney's name between 1971 and 1973, promising them Federal Housing Administration favors for political contribu- tions.

The Medicaid Scandal

Experts Feel That Blame Is Shared
By Congress, Executive Branch, States

BY DAVID E. ROSENBAUM
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Sept. 1 — Such a massive, diffused operation. They also acknowledge that doctors have such political power, both individually and as a group, that politicians in state governments are often unwilling to confront them.

There are signs that the situation may be improving. A special Senate study group has recommended a new system of oversight by the Senate. If put into practice, the system could lead to a more careful review of laws. As for Medicaid specifically, the attention gained by the Moss investigation seems likely to lead to legislative action next year.

Officials at the Department of Health, Education and Welfare acknowledge that Medicaid abuse has gotten out of hand, and they promise an effort to clean house. Already, Federal officials are spot-checking Medicaid records in offices, clinics, hospitals and pharmacies across the country.

Within the states, there has also been increased enforcement. According to records collected in Washington, there were 6,000 investigations and 47 convictions at the state level in connection with Medicaid fraud from July 1975 through March 1976, compared with 1,500 investigations and 10 convictions in the same period the year before. Most of the investigations were in a handful of states, including New Jersey, Michigan and California.

"There's no excuse for what's gone on before, and there's easily enough blame for all of us," said Dr. M. Keith Welles, the Medicaid program's top Federal administrator. He predicted, however, that the Government was on the road to reducing fraud and waste "dramatically."

Others, however, were more skeptical. According to Dr. Cohen, the law should be changed to set strict Federal standards for Medicaid billing control procedures should be strengthened significantly and Federal officials should force state and local authorities to enforce the law or face a loss of Federal funds. Until those steps are taken, he said, the outlook is for continued abuse.

For the most part, said Dr. Cohen, the states abdicated their responsibility to see that the joint Federal-state program was run legally and efficiently. In addition, Dr. Cohen, who is now dean of the School of Education at the University of Michigan, accused local medical societies of shutting their eyes to obvious abuses by members of their profession.

The Medicaid program was one of several dozen social programs enacted in the mid-1960's. Some of the programs have faded from existence, strangled by lack of money. Others, like Medicaid, have expanded far beyond the bounds that were initially envisioned. In nearly all cases, however, Congress has been reluctant to go back and take a look at the forests it planted. There are several reasons.

Politically, the Democrats who control Congress have been less than eager to take a critical view of their party's programs, especially at a time when they were fighting Republican Administrations over the very existence of the programs.

Structurally, the committees in Congress that concentrate on oversight, like Senator Moss's Special Committee on Aging, do not have authority to bring legislation before Congress.

The Moss committee had been investigating Medicaid fraud for years. This latest report gained widespread attention primarily because Senator Moss dramatized it by posing as a Medicaid patient himself. Despite the repeated investigations, no corrective legislation has been forthcoming.

Personally, most members of Congress find oversight unrewarding. There is more fun, more glory and more political credit in creating new programs than there is in reviewing old ones.

Within the executive branch, the attitude during the Republican Administrations has been that the states should be given the loosest possible rein in administering Federal grant-in-aid programs. The Department of Health, Education and Welfare in recent years has thus viewed the management of the Medicaid as chiefly a problem for the states.

The law instructs the Secretary of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare to assure that the states administer Medicaid properly and efficiently. But officials of the Nixon and Ford Administrations, in keeping with their philosophy of state control, have put little pressure on local administrators to police their programs.

Little Enforcement
Within the Federal Government, there has been almost no enforcement of the law. Until this year, there was not a single person assigned full time to investigating Medicaid fraud.

Last year, for the first time, the Administration asked Congress for an appropriation for a staff to conduct such investigations, and the money became available in January.

Of the 119 auditors and other professionals authorized by Congress, about 80 are now on the job, according to department officials, and investigations are now under way in Massachusetts and Ohio. It is doubtful, however, that 100-odd investigators can have much of an impact on a $15 billion program that involves nearly 30 million patients.

At the state level, there has been neither the resources nor the will to monitor the Medicaid program. State officials say that they simply do not have the money, the personnel nor the expertise to control

Congressmen From the Northeast and the Midwest Establish Economic Coalition

By MARTIN TOLCHIN
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Sept. 1—A bipartisan Congressional coalition to advance the economic interests of the financially hard-pressed Northeast, Middle Atlantic and Great Lakes states, whose 218 members of the House of Representatives make up a majority of that body, was organized today amid its sponsors' predictions of near-unanimous support.

"Our task will be to see that the economic position of 16 states from Maine to Iowa is ameliorated," said Representative Henry S. Reuss, Democrat of Wisconsin, who is chairman of the House Committee on Banking, Currency and Housing.

The organizers of the North-East-Midwest Economic Advancement Coalition, which includes New York, New Jersey and Connecticut, noted that the 16 states had an unemployment rate that far surpassed the national average, but received below-average Federal aid per capita. In addition, those states also house the older deteriorating cities which are losing their middle-income populations and therefore needed special Federal Assistance, the organizers said.

Coalition Praised

Representatives from the New York metropolitan area called the coalition an effort to gain political clout by uniting with representatives from other states with similar problems.

"It's about time that we made common cause," said Representative John J. LaFalce, Democrat of upstate New York. "The problems of New York and Buffalo are also the problems of Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Columbus, Toledo, Detroit and Chicago," added Mr. LaFalce, whose district includes part of Buffalo.

Indeed, some of the non-New Yorkers among the 30 representatives at today's organizing meeting were more impassioned than the New Yorkers.

"When the recession gave the national economy a bad cold, our regions were given a strong dose of double pneumonia," said Representative William S. Moorhead, Democrat of Pennsylvania, who is chairman of the Urban Affairs Subcommittee of the Joint Economic Committee.

Representative Thomas L. Ashley, Democrat of Ohio, who is chairman of the Economic Stabilization Subcommittee of the House Banking Committee, told the meeting that "we come from regions which simply are not treated fairly."

"Insist on Equality"

"We don't mean to use the rifle," Mr. Ashley added, "but we have a good deal of clout in this Congress, and we insist on equity."

The representatives debated whether to formally solicit the views of President Ford and Jimmy Carter on some of the specific proposals recommended by Mr. Reuss, who offered a four-point program.

The first task, Mr. Reuss said, was "seeing that the greater joblessness of the Northeast and Midwest is the object of special programs."

Next, he urged "greater attention" for the unemployable, jobless and those who cannot be relocated, including public housing, employment compensation and welfare benefits.

"If you do that, you give the New Yorks, Newarks, Detroit and Clevelands a chance to survive," he said.

Third, Mr. Reuss asked "Is it really necessary to have every Federal job located in Washington, D.C.?"

"I don't see why we can't consider having some of the Federal establishments located in cities where jobs are needed," he added.

Finally, Mr. Reuss said that "the region needs special help in almost every program there is," and urged studying inequities in Congressional formulas and military procurement that he said discriminated against the area.

Mr. Reuss credited Representative Michael J. Harrington, Democrat of Massachusetts, with advancing the idea of a coalition.

"Despite their growing need for relief," Mr. Harrington said, "the industrialized states of the Northeast and Midwest continue to be called upon to finance the economic growth of other regions of the country."

"Numerically speaking, the states of the industrialized Northeast have the potential to secure an equitable share of Federal funds and resources, he continued. "This coalition will hopefully serve as the vehicle through which that potential is realized."

Children from Louisville, Ky., arriving by bus at elementary school, in a suburb of the city, as the school year began without incident.

Louisville Busing Program Begins Without Incident

By REGINALD STUART
Special to The New York Times

Louisville, Ky., Sept. 1—The opening day last year, were no where to be found.

"The situation here is very calm and we've had a routine opening," said James Burch, principal of Southern High School in southwest Jefferson County. He said the students were "very relaxed," particularly when compared with last year.

Southern High, scene of much of the white protest last year, is several hundred yards from where last night's rally of nearly 1,000 people was held. The school, one of those directly involved in the desegregation program, reported attendance today of 1,516. On the first day of school last year only 621 students showed up for class, most of them black.

Attendance Is Up

At Shawnee High School, in the city, attendance was 325 today, compared with 385 on the first day last year. And at Central High School, another inner city school, attendance today was 1,324 students as against 690 on the first day of school last year.

"Elsewhere," too, attendance was significantly higher today than last year's, most officials said, that they would wait until after Labor Day before declaring that the worst was over.

A great deal of credit for the restraint so far has been given to a surprise joint move late Monday by opponents and supporters of desegregation and busing. The heads of more than a dozen organizations issued a joint statement asking that children be allowed to go to their assigned schools and that no action be taken to endanger their safety.

The weather may also have been a factor. It started raining here shortly after noon and the National Weather Service forecasts rain for the next two days.

Prayer in Dayton

DAYTON, Ohio, Sept. 1 (AP)—Determined to avoid any violence, Dayton residents paused today to pray before embarking on the first court-ordered busing plan in Ohio.

A 24-hour prayer vigil for peace was to end tomorrow morning about the time school buses start to pick up students for Dayton's first day under a Federal desegregation plan that calls for 18,421 of the system's 41,928 students to be bused.

Doctors Organize to Fight Malpractice Law

Many of the 1,500 doctors have filed for an all-out attack on a new statewide malpractice insurance requirement and effective today.

The new law requires medical malpractice insurance, but not dentists, optometrists, or other health care workers to carry it. It also allows malpractice suits to be filed in small claims court, and it allows the doctors to sue for malpractice insurance coverage.

Dr. Claude V. Caver, the key organizer of the Hawaii Physicians Protective Association, which is mounting the strongest opposition to the new law, said it was possible that the physicians would close their offices if they did not receive assurances that they could practice without complying with the malpractice insurance coverage.

Senate Contenders in New York State Still Seek Issue

By FRANK LYNN

With less than two weeks until the primary, the five-way struggle in New York for the Democratic nomination for the United States Senate still boils down to four candidates in search of an issue that will separate them from the pack.

However, two of the candidates—Representative Bella S. Abzug, 56 years old, and Daniel P. Moynihan, 49—appear to have emerged as front-runners, if not on issues, judging by the attacks on them by their competitors, their own private assessments and the soundings of relatively impartial politicians.

Regardless of their relative standing at the moment, four of the Senate contenders—Ramsey Clark, City Council President Paul O'Dwyer, Mrs. Abzug and Mr. Moynihan—have far more in common than they have differences. Even their few differences are more a matter of emphasis and tactics than substance.

The fifth Senate hopeful, Abraham Hirschfeld, 56, does stand out from his colleagues. He is a wealthy garage builder with a light political power base who is relying on a massive television advertising campaign to win votes.

The winner of the Democratic primary on Sept. 14 will face in the November election the Republican candidate who merges from the primary between Senator James L. Buckley, the Conservative Republican incumbent, and Representative Irving H. Pomeroy, the Conservative Democrat.

In contrast with Mr. Hirschfeld, the four other candidates have high recognition and low television budgets. None is expected to spend much more than $500,000 on the entire campaign, a relatively small amount for statewide races. Mr. Hirschfeld is spending twice as much.

While Mr. Hirschfeld appears ideologically, the four others have taken most of the certified liberal positions, although they will not readily admit it in a year when moderate and conservative stand are fashionable.

The closest thing to an issue so far has been defense spending. But even here the differences generally seem more a matter of degree or tactics than substance.

Israel's Future Debated

Mr. Moynihan raised the defense subject to try to cut himself out of the herd and at the same time capitalize on the issue that has preoccupied the candidates, undoubtedly because of a primary electorate that will be up to 40 percent Jewish.

Although he, too, has gone long with $6 billion in defense cuts proposed in the Democratic national platform, Mr. Moynihan has seized on Mr. Clark's advocacy of a $30 billion cut in the defense budget and Mrs. Abzug's perennial opposition to the defense budget to imply that they are willing to hamstring not only this country but also Israel.

"He who says he wants a weak America wants an overwhelmed Israel," Mr. Moynihan declared at a debate at Hofstra University.

Mr. Moynihan's opponents eatedly deny any connection between the defense cuts and opposition to Israel. Mr. O'Dwyer, who said he sided toward the Clark position on defense cuts, referred to Mr. Moynihan as a "Johnny on the spot" on the Israel issue, while earlier this week Mrs. Abzug loudly denounced the former United Nations Representative at a meeting of the Jewish Political Action Committee in Manhattan.

"Moynihan made one interesting and valid speech at the 'N', but he was not recorded as ever before interested in Israel," Mrs. Abzug declared as she characterized Moynihan's attack on the microphone to emphasize her point.

"I was a Zionist at 13," she said, adding, "One speech does not make a commitment." The reference was to Mr. Moynihan's attack on the United Nations resolution equating Zionism with racism.

Mr. Moynihan's repeated linking of the defense cuts and Israel angered Mrs. Abzug to the point where she injected another issue into the campaign by declaring that she would not support Mr. Moynihan even if he won the primary. Even Abzug supporters conceded that was a mistake.

The explosive exchange between Mr. Moynihan and Mrs. Abzug and the attacks on them by the other candidates point up the general belief that they are the front-runners.

"It's a race between myself and Moynihan," Mrs. Abzug said this week. The Moynihan camp concurs. The others presumably don't.

But there is much on which all the candidates agree.

Standard Liberal Positions

All take the standard liberal positions. They agree that jobs and the economy are the major concern at the moment. All favor the Humphrey-Hawkins Federal job bill. All favor a Federal takeover of welfare. All back Federal aid for New York City in its fiscal plight. All favor a national health insurance plan.

Mr. Moynihan has diverged somewhat by his heavy emphasis on the survival of the family and his concern with a "soaring" divorce rate, dropping birth rate and "almost as many abortions each year as there are live births." Yesterday Mr. Moynihan criticized the Supreme Court decision allowing teenagers to obtain abortions without parental consent.

In foreign affairs, all favor Peter A. Beyer of Irvington-on-Hudson Senator Buckley's already assured of the Conservative line.

He has sought to do so by pointing up his service with four Presidents, arguing that he was serving the country not the individual and that it is necessary to work with the opposition, and also emphasizing his role in the writing of the Democratic platform.

Mr. Moynihan, who has proved to be an easy and effective campaigner—despite earlier fears that he would be a bumbler—is resting his case for the Jewish voters almost exclusively on that defended Israel. Rarely have two speeches had such political impact, judging by his reception in Jewish areas. For example, he was mobbed recently in the diamond district like no other candidate since Robert F. Kennedy.

As for the 60 percent non-Jewish electorate, Mr. Moynihan describes himself as a centrist, talks repeatedly about preservation of the family and his family-assistance program during the Nixon Administration, uses his full name, Daniel Patrick Moynihan, in press releases, describes those liberals who, he says, downgrade this country, projects the image that he is somewhat hawkish on defense spending, although he also wants to cut it.

His campaign slogan sums it up: "He spoke up for America; he'll speak up for you."

O'Dwyer

Like Mrs. Abzug, Mr. O'Dwyer is touting down the image, if not changing it outright. He has been one of the state's most liberal politicians for decades, a leader in the labor, civil rights, antiwar, Irish and Israeli-aid groups.

He still recaps this record at length—often to the yawns of an audience—but now emphasizes that he is the Democratic regular organization designee and the candidate most likely to unify the party.

Speaking of Mr. Moynihan and Mrs. Abzug, he said: "When they get into battles, they leave scar tissue all over the place."

He is seeking support from both Jews and Catholics on the basis of his record and often campaigns in the older neighborhoods of the city. As a longtime political maverick looking for and receiving the support of the Democratic organization, Mr. O'Dwyer said recently that "the other way I was losing elections." He was the anti-organization Senate contender in 1968.

Clark

Another repeater, Mr. Clark, who won the Senate primary battle two years ago but lost the election war, is gearing his campaign to issues and positions papers—14 so far.

Mr. Clark, who clothes his background as a United States Attorney General and son of a Supreme Court justice with a "country boy" style, often seems more like an academic than a candidate. He discusses the intricacies and ramifications of issues long past the tolerance of most listeners.

What does come across to many listeners, however, is the intensity of his convictions as he talks about economic injustice in the nation and long-range poverty that is not likely to be solved in one election or one Congress.

"It's issue versus personality—that's the way I see it," Mr. Clark said of the current campaign as he walked along East Broadway, shaking hands with merchants with more ease than he did two years ago. "You can't solve problems with personality."

Hirschfeld

Mr. Hirschfeld was born with his style—a strong accent stemming from his Polish and Israeli backgrounds and the malapropisms that sprinkle his speeches. He referred recently on television to the straw that broke the camel's back but mistakenly referred to another part of the camel's anatomy.

He actually jokes about his accent by invariably telling audiences that they can imitate his accent but he can't imitate theirs.

Mr. Hirschfeld leans heavily on his business and nongovernmental background to make the point that he can bring business acumen to government. "I'm a doer, not a talker" is a frequent Hirschfeld line.

has been a trademark and can still stare down an audience as few politicians can.

But her usual aggressive speaking style and manner is now softened by broad smiles, soft-spoken interludes and even, like most politicians, references to her 32-year-long marriage and "extremely supportive" mate, Martin Abzug, who often accompanies her.

Instead of emphasizing antiwar and feminist militancy, Mrs. Abzug points up her Congressional record and experience. Two standbys that she refers to are a survey of Congressmen that rated her the third most effective member of the House and a virtual endorsement by Thomas P. O'Neill, the House majority Establishment credentials.

"I know how to get the job done; I know where the action is," she said several days ago. She has also stressed her role as the only woman in the race by pointing out nonaggressive by that there are no woman what a Senator looks like, but I am what a Senator should look like," she says repeatedly.

However, the "old" Bella is almost certain to emerge with mention of Mr. Moynihan whom she has relentlessly attacked as "Nixon's favorite Democrat," a reference to Mr. Moynihan's service in the Administration of President Richard M. Nixon and President Ford.

Moynihan

One of Mr. Moynihan's major tasks has been to live down his Republican association, particularly with the discredited Mr. Nixon.

He has sought to do so by pointing up his service with four Presidents, arguing that he was serving the country not the individual and that it is necessary to work with the opposition, and also emphasizing his role in the writing of the Democratic platform.

Mr. Moynihan, who has proved to be an easy and effective campaigner—despite earlier fears that he would be a bumbler—is resting his case for the Jewish voters almost exclusively on that defended Israel. Rarely have two speeches had such political impact, judging by his reception in Jewish areas. For example, he was mobbed recently in the diamond district like no other candidate since Robert F. ## Court Rules Wright Supporter Can Run for Seat in Assembly

The Appellate Division ruled yesterday that supporters of Councilman Samuel D. Wright, the Democratic leader of Brooklyn's 54th Assembly District, could replace with another Wright supporter, their Assembly candidate, who was ruled off the Sept. 14 primary ballot two weeks ago.

The ruling marked a victory for Mr. Wright on one of the many fronts in his battle to defeat Representative Shirley Chisholm for the Democratic nomination for the House of Representatives in the 12th Congressional District and undisputed political leadership of the mostly black and Puerto Rican central Brooklyn.

The 54th Assembly District, in the Brownsville section, Mr. Wright's heretofore unshakable political base, is just one of seven Assembly Districts where Mr. Wright and Mrs. Chisholm are supporting different candidates.

The Appellate Division decision upheld an Aug. 27 lower-court ruling that removed from the ballot Elmer Hamilton, Mr. Wright's original, hand-picked candidate, because he did not meet residency requirements, but allowed sponsors of his candidacy to substitute another candidate of their choice.

The substitute named last Friday was Charles Hamilton, another long-time Wright associate who won the Assembly seat in 1974 but resigned for health reasons after less than a year.

The 36-year-old Mr. Hamilton is currently the area's New York State Lottery representative, a patronage post that is usually filed at the recommendation of the area's district leader.

Thomas Boyland, the insurgent supported by Mrs. Chisholm, plans to appeal the allowed substitution to the Court of Appeals.

Such a substitution, his attorneys argue, removes the finality of court-ordered disqualification and abrogates the rights of those who signed the nominating petitions of the original candidate.

Ruling Allows an Increase In Spending By Candidates

By WARREN WEAVER Jr.
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Sept. 1 — Jimmy Carter's legal advisers have found a way to inject up to $4.5 million worth of private political contributions into the national campaigns of both major parties over and above the present $25 million spending ceiling for each ticket.

Taking advantage of a Federal Election Commission regulation originally intended for a much narrower purpose, the Carter forces have obtained an official interpretation that could provide some welcome leeway in a very tight campaign budget.

The President Ford Committee greeted the commission ruling with enthusiasm. Its lawyers have analyzed the decision and distributed a memorandum to political chairmen and party lawyers in all 50 states, showing them how to take advantage of the new spending authority.

Under the new campaign law, each major party's national ticket receives a $21.8 million Federal subsidy, plus a maximum of $3.2 million in private donations to the party's National Committee that can be spent on the Presidential and Vice-Presidential effort.

The commission's decision allows every Democratic and Republican state, county, Congressional District and city committee — there may be as many as 9,000 of them in the two parties — to raise $1,000 and spend it in support of their Presidential ticket in anyway they see fit.

In New York for example, each state committee can raise $1,000 as can each of the 62 county committees and 62 city committees and 39 Congressional District committees, for a potential total of $164,000 a party. They can coordinate the way the money is spent, but cannot pool it for a single media campaign.

Two Other Changes

The commission ruling also makes two other changes in interpretation of the law that will save the Carter and Ford committees money. They are:

Party political committees may spend unlimited amounts of money, none of it chargeable to the national ticket, on sample ballots or "state cards" that list the names of three or more candidates, but do not contain biographies or promotional material.

The full cost of maintaining political headquarters that which were limited to 60 minutes. The length and dates of the subsequent encounters between Mr. Ford and Mr. Carter, as well as the debate between their running mates have yet to be determined.

Today's agreement came far more easily than the agreement between the Kennedy and Nixon campaigns, which held twelve separate meetings over a period of three weeks before reaching a tentative agreement in 1960. The Carter and Ford negotiating teams had their first meeting with the League last Thursday and their second this morning.

Speaking for the committee set up by the League of Women Voters Education Fund to arrange the debates, Rita E. Hauser noted that the understandings announced today were "subject to final agreement on all technical matters."

Mrs. Hauser, a New York attorney who was co-chairman of the Committee to Re-elect the President four years ago, was flanked by representatives of the two candidates as she spoke. William D. Ruckelshaus, the former deputy attorney general who was there for President Ford, expressed confidence that the remaining details would be easily resolved.

"We've got an essential agreement," he said. "The outlines of the agreement are firm."

Mr. Carter's press secretary, Jody Powell, commented on the high level of the negotiating sessions and said that it had been an "honor" to take part in them. The note of mutual congratulations contrasted to the politically barbed comments traded by the negotiating teams before they sat down for their first session last week.

The agreement announced today coincided with neither the original proposal announced by the League or a proposal outlined last week by President Ford.

In a news conference at Vail, Colo., the President had called for the first debate to be held shortly after Labor Day and suggested also that it be limited to the subject of national defense. He said he wanted four debates in all, each 90 minutes long.

Mr. Carter's spokesmen said he supported the proposal of the league, which called for three 60-minute debates between the Presidential candidates, with the first on Sept. 28th.

"I think there was a lot of give and take on both sides," Mr. Ruckelshaus said. "The overriding purpose that both of us had was to have these debates come off."

An unidentified woman offered campaign advice to Senator Walter F. Mondale of Minnesota, as the Democratic Vice-Presidential candidate toured Santa Monica, Calif.

At a news conference in Plains, Ga., following the announcement of the agreement, Mr. Carter said that the Ford side had been "kind enough to yield" on the subject of the first debate. He said that the President's representatives had also suggested Washington as the site for the first debate but had given way on that.

The Democratic nominees said they would be "very respectful" of the President but added: "I'll be an aggressive debater."

At the White House, Mr. Ford described the debates as "the best way this campaign can be decided." Asked if he thought he had an advantage, he replied: "I believe an incumbent President ought to know all the subjects and know them very well."

In sponsoring the Presidential debates, the league sought to take advantage of a ruling last fall by the Federal Communications Commission, which held that they could be exempted from the "equal time" provisions of the Federal Communications Act so long as they were televised in their entirety and were sponsored by someone other than the networks.

That ruling could still be challenged in the courts by former Senator Eugene J. McCarthy, who is running as an independent candidate, or former Gov. Lester G. Maddox of Georgia, the nominee of the American Independent Party. But it has already been challenged at the appellate court level and upheld. Mrs. Hauser expressed confidence that it

Carter Clinging to Old Campaign

By CHARLES MUHR
Special to The New York Times

PLAINS, Ga., Sept. 1 — On the eve of the general election campaign, Jimmy Carter is talking more and more as though he were back in the snows of New Hampshire in the long primary grind.

The Democratic Presidential nominee, in several public appearances early this week, made remarks that indicated he thought it far more important that people believe he cared for them and understood their needs than that he specify solutions and issues in greater detail.

It was not clear just how Mr. Carter would conduct the 1976 fall campaign, but it was clear that he was showing a reluctance to abandon the old techniques, formulas and methods of expression that helped him win the party nomination.

On Tuesday morning he implored a conference of Democratic state chairmen meeting in Washington not to make demands on his time that would limit a handshaking campaign to be waged at factory gates and even in barbershops and beauty parlors.

How practical that kind of Presidential campaign would be is open to some doubt since Mr. Carter, who seldom politics on Sunday, says he will have only about 45 full campaign days between the formal opening of his campaign Monday and Election Day, Nov. 2. But the fact that Mr. Carter spent considerable time shaking hands at a factory gate during a West Coast trip last week may mean he is very serious.

"I am no big shot," Mr. Carter told the state chairmen, repeating a theme he had sounded several times in two days. "I am not anybody's boss. I want to be everybody's servant."

When Mr. Carter appeared before the general board of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations, he had a written speech on economic policy. But Mr. Carter departed freely from the prepared text, improvising and wandering in more colloquial language, and dropped much of the prepared address. And when he had finished that speech, he in effect began another.

As he had done at a brief appearance earlier in the day before the state legislative directors of the United Transportation Union, Mr. Carter reverted to his so-called "basic speech" of primary election days. To political buffs and journalists, it was as though a piano had picked up a familiar refrain.

He praised the country and the "common sense and high moral character" of its people. He spoke of a people "deeply wounded" by revelations of public wrongdoing.

The economic address to the A.F.L.-C.I.O. was a reprise of themes Mr. Carter had outlined earlier this summer after a day-long discussion of the economy with advisers gathered at his Georgia home. He discussed cutting unemployment and inflation, increasing productivity, tougher enforcement of Anti-trust laws and protection of the consumer as among his major economic goals.

But Mr. Carter put more emphasis today on image than issues.

He told the Democratic state chairman that he could already see demands on his campaign time that were "contrary to the best interests of my own campaign." He asked the chairman not to "isolate" him in hotel rooms "with powerful political figures" when he visits their states.

'Active Impression'

"I'm going to do all I can to stay away from the establishments," he added, saying that he wanted to campaign near factory gates to leave the "active impression" that his interests "are those of the working family."

The motives and impulses behind this approach are not easy to identify with certainty.

Some of Mr. Carter's staff members believe that he should not and does not want to change what worked for him during the long primary struggle. Mr. Carter told volunteers gathered to hear him in Atlanta that his fall campaign would have the "same basic thrust" as the old battle that "paid off for us."

But it is possible to see dangers, too. Mr. Carter's sometimes rather pious basic speech was repeated in the primaries almost word for word. But circumstances of unfamiliarity, he campaigned only a few each primary state, relatively limited and sure. Many people would the speech for the only time when they in person or on a television program. And it never heard "the same" until he incorporated it into his acceptance at the Democratic Convention in July.

Answered Oath

Moreover, Mr. Carter is able to answer questions the audience during debates, offsetting a that he was unprepared. He generalized, sometimes basic speech do better repeated use of the election campaign, scrutinized by the repeated use of the might become less even monotonous.

However, Mr. Carter sincerely to believe, understands the mood better than anyone. At times this week one had traveled no more or listened no in the last 20 months said that he knew earned voters and he them. The test of the tion will be the numbers of the nation survey poll results a pass.

A final legacy from one of America's most gifted storytellers!

"Jacqueline Susann's DOLORES is destined to become a bestseller..."
—John Barkham Reviews

Here's the novel America has been waiting for! The tantalizingly familiar tale of an assassinated young President's widow who emerges from mourning to become the undisputed queen of the "beautiful people."

Written during the waning days of her unsuccessful battle against cancer, Jacqueline Susann's DOLORES is a rich tapestry of characterization... Dolores, her lovers, her younger sister—and the French billionaire who tries to tempt Dolores into a loveless marriage.

DOLORES is a fascinating glimpse into the lavish lifestyles—and upper echelon promiscuity—of America's most glamorous set. And the shocker ending is a real beauty!

Don't miss DOLORES. It's this year's "must read" novel!

Good Deal Checking is working.

From the day we started Good Deal Checking, people stopped paying monthly maintenance charges. They also stopped paying a charge for each check they used. No matter how many checks they wrote. That's a good deal.

To get that, people keep at least $200 in their checking account. Or $200 in a savings account, which earns the highest interest allowable. That's a good deal, too.

When you get right down to it, people keep switching to Marine Midland because Good Deal Checking is a good deal.

President Warns Nation On Unilateral Troop Cut

By PHILIP SHABECOFF
Special to The New York Times
WASHINGTON Sept. 1—President Ford warned today against any unilateral troop withdrawals or reductions in defense spending by the United States and seemed to include his rival, Jimmy Carter, among "the voices of retreat."
Speaking at the annual conference of the National Guard Association, Mr. Ford said: "The world is still a dangerous place. We cannot lay down our arms in the simple hope that others will follow our lead. We cannot retreat from the front lines of freedom if we are to preserve our freedom here at home."
Then Mr. Ford, who is expected to make defense policy a major issue in his campaign this fall, said that "there are those in this political year who want to withdraw our troops from their positions overseas."
"The voices of retreat talk about a phased withdrawal," he said, adding: "They talk as if our defenses won't be weakened if we only dismantle them one brick at a time. They are very, very wrong. Preparedness preserves peace, weakness invites war."
The President did not mention Mr. Carter by name in his speech. But at a White House news briefing shortly afterward, Ron Nessen, the President's press secretary, said Mr. Carter's statements speak for themselves.
Mr. Carter has said that some American troops could be slowly withdrawn from overseas posts, specifically from South Korea, without endangering the nation's security. The up to a point. And I wished him luck — up to a point." Since his only other stop in Georgia today was at the Macon City Hall where he met with the Republican state central committee, Mr. Dole was asked why his visit was so short if the Republican ticket really planned a hard campaign in the South between now and the Nov. 2 election. "We're coming back," he reiterated. "I'd assume there's interest here in the Ford-Dole ticket compared with Carter-Mondale ticket. We're coming back, I guarantee that."

THE HIFI SHOW

The minute you walk in the door at any Tech Hifi location, you can tell right away that we're more like a show than an ordinary store.

In the first place, we have more of the latest models from all the major manufacturers on display (and our soundrooms are specially equipped so you can instantly compare any combinations of these components, just by pressing a button).

If it's new and exciting, you'll find it on display at Tech Hifi.

And unlike an ordinary store, when you walk in the door at The Hifi Show, you get greeted by hifi consultants — not high pressure salespeople.

Feel free to spend as much time talking to them as you like. You won't be made to feel like you have to spend money.

Our knowledgeable, low pressure, salespeople are one very good reason why even if you're not thinking about buying hifi right now, you'll enjoy coming in to The Hifi Show.

Finally, no hifi show would be complete without a mind-boggling component giveaway. So Tech Hifi is giving away a $7,000 Super System with state-of-the-art components from AKG, B*1+C, dbx, Electro Voice, Koss, Micro-Acoustics, Ohm, Phase Linear, Pioneer, SAE, TEAC, and Technics. To be eligible to win, just enter your name at any Tech Hifi location. But you better hurry, the giveaway ends September 10!

Feel free to drop by The Hifi Show at any time to find out what's new, talk to experts, learn the finer points of hifi, or register to win a $7,000 Super System. Admission is free.

Tech Hifi is The Hifi Show.

THE HIFI SALE

Of all places you can buy hifi, only Tech Hifi has the combined buying power of 50 stereo stores.

So if you want to get the lowest prices on brand-name hifi components, come in to Tech Hifi (we get the best deal, so we can give you the best deal).

We actually guarantee you the lowest price, in writing. (We also guarantee your complete satisfaction with the components you buy from us).

The systems featured here are just some of the great deals we have in store for you this week.

If you're looking for a high performance, yet reasonably-priced, home music system — you can't do better than this one for only $329.

The stereo receiver is the Pioneer SX 434, with ample power for most listening situations, and a tuner section that compares with receivers selling for $100 more! EPI 60 "Linear Sound" loudspeakers deliver the kind of accurate, wide-range, response you expect from an EPI product. A high quality Garrard 440M automatic turntable with a base, dustcover, and an unusually rugged Pickering magnetic cartridge complete this value-packed system. (For only $20 more, you can substitute big Studio Design 36 loudspeakers for the EPI's).

And for only $399 we're more than willing to guarantee that you won't find a better-sounding system than this next one anywhere.

It features the excellent Marantz 2215 stereo receiver, with 15 watts minimum RMS per channel at 8 ohms from 40 to 20,000 Hz., with no more than 0.8% Total Harmonic Distortion. That's plenty of power to achieve truly satisfying volume levels with the KLH 101 2-way loudspeakers. The high-performance Philips GA 427 belt-drive turntable with an Audio Technica AT90E Dual Magnet cartridge complete the system.

Other "sale priced" systems start as low as $199.

House Bars a Rise in Congressional Pay

By RICHARD L. MADDEN
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Sept. 1—On the eve of its Labor Day recess, the House voted today to kill a scheduled cost-of-living pay increase next month for members of Congress, Federal judges and top officials of the executive branch.

By a vote of 325 to 75, the House added an amendment denying the pay increase to a pending $780 million appropriations bill to fund the operations of Congress in the fiscal year starting Oct. 1.

After long partisan wrangling and after defeating, 199 to 195, a Republican attempt to add legislative reform proposals to the bill, the House approved the appropriations measure by a voice vote and sent it to the Senate.

It is uncertain, however, whether that chamber will accept the provision withholding the pay increase to representatives and senators, 1,050 Federal judges and an estimated 785 of the highest-ranking Federal executives, including Cabinet members.

President Ford has not yet recommended the amount of the cost-of-living pay increase due next month for most Federal employees, but it is expected to be about 5 percent.

Members of Congress now receive $44,600 a year, and under a pay increase bill passed last year, the senators and representatives, judges and the top-level executives.

These proposed automatic Congressional salary increases have been a sensitive issue particularly among first-term representatives seeking re-election in marginal districts.

Before the battle over the pay raise began today, Speaker Carl Albert told reporters: "I can't imagine voting at a worse time than just before Labor Day and going out to make speeches."

The Senate recessed today until next Tuesday and the House plans to recess tomorrow until next Wednesday.

Initially the House considered denying the next round of pay raises only to representatives, but this brought criticism from Representative Robert N. Giannino, Democrat of Connecticut, and others.

"It demeans us. It shames us. It puts us in an inferior position," Mr. Giannino said, adding that the representatives could go home and tell constituents: "Ha—I voted against a $2,000 increase for myself."

Then Representative Morris K. Udall, Democrat of Arizona, successfully altered the proposal to deny the pay increase to senators as well as representatives, judges and the top-level executives.

"The bureaucrats will hate me," he said later. However, Representative Larry Pressler, Republican of South Dakota, accused the House of "playing a cruel hoax" because he said, a Federal commission is expected to recommend substantial increases in Congressional salaries next January after the November election.

In a separate battle, the Republicans were thwarted in attempts to open the appropriations bill to proposals aimed at curbing payroll abuses brought out in the investigation of Representative Wayne L. Hays, Democrat of Ohio.

The Republicans said that their proposals, such as ordering a General Accounting Office audit of House accounts and making House spending records open to the public, would restore public confidence in Congress.

But Representative Richard Bolling, Democrat of Missouri, argued that the House already was moving to curb payroll abuses and to make other administrative changes.

Without mentioning Mr. Hays by name, Mr. Bolling said that the Republicans were seeking to make the issue of alleged irregularities "of an older, sick and sad member into some kind of a Watergate case." He added, "That is absolutely, totally, patently ridiculous."

CONFEREES AGREE ON DEFENSE FUND

$104 Billion Measures Raises Spending by $14 Billion

WASHINGTON, Sept. 1 (UPI)—House and Senate conferees approved today a compromise $104.3 billion defense appropriations bill that ultimately could increase military spending by $14 billion over present levels.

The measure, which goes to the House and Senate for approval, includes a "go slow" approach to the Air Force's B-1 bomber that would put the decision on full-scale production up to the next President.

Jimmy Carter, the Democratic Presidential candidate, has asked that a production decision be made after the next President is inaugurated. President Ford wants Congress to fund the $21.6 billion project and start production immediately.

The conference report authorized $104.3 billion, which is under the House and Senate targets. Mr. Ford's budget request was $107.9 billion.

But the total is likely to be increased by $2.2 billion this year because of supplemental appropriations needed to cover pay increases for blue-collar and military personnel. This would push the fiscal year 1977 defense spending to $106.5 billion, or $14 billion above the $92.4 billion in fiscal year 1976.

"In my judgment, this is a diminution of the antidefense attitude in the country," said the House conferee chairman, Representative George H. Mahon, Democrat of Texas, a defense advocate.

The conferees killed the Navy's Condor missile program, under research and development for 13 years. The Defense Department had hoped to begin a $1 billion production program for 60 missiles in the next fiscal year.

The Condor, built by Rockwell International, was killed because it is an electrical optical missile, which does not work at night, in fog, clouds or rain.

The major conflict was resolved yesterday when conferees agreed to fund the B-1 bomber project at $87 million a month from October to February to allow the next President to decide on the program.

The House bill gave the program a green light, while the Senate bill blocked funds for production until Feb. 1. Mr. Mahon said that the compromise would allow Rockwell to keep its production team employed and start work on three production line B-1s.

In another area, the Senate conferees backed off a six-year phaseout of subsidies for military commissaries, allowing a subsidy of $287 million in the fiscal year 1977.

The conferees also reduced pay raises for military leaders from 396 to 300 at a cost of $3 million and required the Defense Department to present alternatives next year. The use of servants, who are military personnel assigned to wait on generals and admirals has been under attack since 1972 when there were 1,722 costing $20 million a year.

Two Buffalo Men Sentenced On Manslaughter Charges

BUFFALO, Aug. 31 (AP)—Two young Buffalo men have been sentenced to up to 10 years in prison after they pleaded guilty to second-degree manslaughter.

The two, Ronald Bader, 19 years old, and Joseph S. Horton, 20, were sentenced Monday by Justice Frederick M. Marshall of State Supreme Court.

Benjamin L. Berger, attorney for the defense, said the sentence would be appealed. The men were originally convicted last December of arson and murder in a Jan. 7, 1976, blaze in which a Buffalo fireman died.

Justice Marshall set aside the murder conviction in January and ordered a retrial that the prosecution did not provide evidence for a vacant building that had bad repair. The men were charged with second-degree manslaughter rather than first-degree.

GIVE FUN TO AID THE FRESH AIR

A HOUSE CANDIDATE KILLED IN AIR CRASH

SPOKANE, Wash., Sept. 1 (AP)—A Republican Congressional candidate, Charles G. Kimball, was killed yesterday along with his wife, infant son and two other persons in the crash of a private plane, the Spokane County coroner said today.

Lois Shanks, the coroner, identified the victims of the crash as the 26-year-old Mr. Kimball; his wife, Vivian, 19; their 1-month-old son, Patrick; Mark Bruce, 19, a campaign worker; and John Alexander, 40, the owner and pilot of the six-passenger Cessna plane.

Philip Foote, Mr. Kimball's campaign manager, and other Kimball workers said the candidate had told them that he was flying to Lewiston, Idaho, for a political meeting.

The police said that the plane apparently was making an approach to Felts Field here last night when it struck a utility pole in an industrial area. It crashed in front of a building where it struck a truck and burst into flames, the police said.

Gasoline Found Ample For Holiday Weekend

WASHINGTON, Sept. 1 (AP)—Motorists should have no trouble finding gasoline during the Labor Day weekend, although they may pay a slightly higher price, the American Automobile Association said today.

The A.A.A. said its survey of 3,600 retail gasoline outlets in all parts of the country found adequate supplies of all grades of gasoline and reported that a large percentage of stations would be open during the three-day holiday.

However, it also found that the average price of all grades of gasoline continued to climb, although more slowly than in the early summer.

'St. Ives' Is Entertaining Crime Film

ST. IVES, directed by Leo Thompson; story by Leo Thompson; screenplay by Leo Thompson; based on the novel "The Precious Chronicle" by Oliver St. John Gogarty; produced by Pancho Kohner and Stanley Center; director of photography, Lucien Ballard; edited by Richard Anderson; music by Lalo Schifano. Released by Warner Bros. "St. Ives" is a rare, feature-length, 110-minute film. This film has been rated PG.

By RICHARD EDER
It may sound like an extremely modest recommendation, but one of the chief virtues of "St. Ives," a suspense drama about a crime reporter up against a triple dissimulation, reversal and red herrings that by the time it is unraveled at the end we have lost most of the threads we had been trying to hold. It does not lie in the photography, which is over-dramatic, or the music, which is like somebody breathing heavily into your ear.

Charles Bronson, unclothed, in "St. Ives" "While the bodies fall all around, he remains skeptical"

The attraction of "St. Ives," which opened yesterday at Loews State II and other theaters, is that it takes itself too seriously not too lightly. Its occasional wit avoids heavy reliance on violence, car chases and other such mechanical paraphernalia.

crooked American businessmen are paying to some crooked Arab. The writer more or less works along with the House-man character and his two associates: a psychiatrist played by Maximilian Schell, and a beautiful woman played by Maximilian Schell. There are innumerable double-crosses. It all comes to an end with most of the principals dead and with Mr. Bronson throwing Miss Bisset into a swimming pool.

out to be not as nice as she seems—instead of dunking her. Similarly, there is a car chase: The car goes about 20 feet before it crashes. Finally, there is what must be the least explicit sex scene of the year. Miss Bisset sits down on Mr. Bronson's bed, smoldering. She puts one hand to her zipper and, believe it or not, the scene ends. Miss Bisset, who does wonderful things for silly roles and once in a while is allowed to do wonderful things for good ones, makes that unpulled zipper seem like an X-rating all by itself.

more like Fu Manchu, is not good at a great many things, but he does a few things rather well. He manages a pleasantly tried skepticism while the bodies fall all around. He is like one of those companions on a long trip who become agreeable by not saying very much. "St. Ives" does come to mean rather a long and foolish trip, but Miss Bisset and Mr. Bronson help it pass amiably enough.

Rock-and-Roll, Texas Style, Riding High

By JOHN ROCKWELL
Texas rock-and-roll has been riding high in New York the last two nights, what with Johnny and Edgar Winter at the Felt Forum and Doug Sahn at the Other End. The Winters are the more popular of the two, and played to the bigger audiences. But Mr. Sahn was appreciably the more pleasing; this was as fine a set of roots rock as this listener has heard in a good, long time.

dilute the purity of Johnny's blues. Neither sings very well, but their primal gurgles do the job. The evening was a litany of present-day rock, full of "rock-and-roll," "yeah's" and "boogies." The music plodded industriously along, the steady blues base overlaid with feverish ornamentation and other simulations of excitement. At its best, toward the end, the Winters at least convinced one that they like to play.

music has a Texas-based focus (nearly all the songs seem to make specific referenc to the state) and an individuality that the Winters' more generalized, impersonal style sorely lacks. Perhaps this is partly because the intimate Other End is a far better place to hear and see than the gloomy Felt Forum. But it's also because Mr. Sahn's gifts are so forceful—that wonderful, rangy stage presence, simultaneously comfortable and rock-and-roll crazy; the high, tough singing voice; and that easy, masterly command of electric guitar and fiddle. The songs, original or borrowed, are confident and convincing, and the latest band, the Texas Tornado, sounds solid and lively.

Doug Sahn Texas invigorated him

The Winters came from Beaumont, near the Louisiana border. They grew up in a blues environment, more Southern than specifically Texas, and Johnny later polished his skills in Chicago. For some years now, they have toured steadily as part of the internationalized world of big-time rock.

Mr. Sahn has wandered further afield, one might think, and indeed his set at the Other End was full of the same sort of range that informs Willie Nelson's music, from rock and blues to rockabilly, country, bluegrass, folk fiddling, Tex-Mex ballads and Depression-era string-band swing. But Mr. Sahn's go there periodically to recharge ourselves. In the meantime, however, it would be nice if Mr. Sahn could visit us more often.

Thus both the Winters and Mr. Sahn ring a lot more than pure Texas to their offerings, and so the relative success of their performances has much to do with how they balance diverse influences and the original heritage.

The second story, suggestive of the expressionist theme of the 1920's, concerns the insane doorkeeper at the theater where the actress is working. A former Shakespearean actor, he begins to see her as the wife who once betrayed him. At the movie's end, spouting Othello and Hamlet, he kills her.

The PG rating is based, apparently, on the murder and a sex scene between the lover and his estranged wife. The movie, which opened at the Thalia and the Cinema Village, is not likely to draw many children, in any case.

ers—Miss Leslie makes the role not only believable but endearing as well: a shifting prism of high spirits, grief, humor and irrepressible life. She is so good that without being able to believe the murder at the end, we are terribly sorry about it.

GOING OUT Guide

WELCOME BACK "National Velvet" (1944), one of the most hallowed of all family movies, is a last-minute substitute as this morning's feature at 10 o'clock and the only M-G-M entry in the program of Warner films at the Regency Theater, Broadway and 67th Street. The Hollywood feature, rarely revived or shown on television, drew acclaim as a heart-warming story of two English children (Elizabeth Taylor and Mickey Rooney) who train a horse for the Grand National Steeplechase (a thrilling climax).

are a pleasant surprise. The facade, a mirror-like wall that reflects your image out front almost accusingly, makes you hesitate on First Avenue just below 49th Street. Does Coney Island ride again? Not at all. Step inside, turn right and you're in a snug oasis, semi-partitioned from the large dining area, with a bar shaped like the numeral 7. The cheerfully subdued lighting, silver-gray décor and music all blend nicely. The place is already catching on as a cocktail rendezvous, although the alternating pianist-singers, Norm Kubrim (Tuesday through Thursday) and Brian Hurley (Monday, Friday and Saturday) don't begin until about 9 P.M., performing until 1 A.M. Bar prices seem reasonable enough, with one couple sipping white wine the other evening at $1.60 per glass. Mr. Hurley, a personable young man with a sprightly style of playing and singing, was on duty as the spotlighted spinnet, welcoming requests. One was "Tea for Two." Somehow the lyrics got turned around; Mr. Hurley persevered, with an apologetic grin. He slid from this into the popular "Magic of Your Love," with a Chopin prelude set to a rock beat. Then he played the tropic-beat "Giri from Ipanema" and picked up the vocal on the surprise of the hour.

zle some but it really shouldn't. This is the play about the dance-marathon craze of the Depression era that won praise on Broadway for Julie Harris although June Havoc's drams had only 49 performances back in 1964. The same material, with the contestants' hopes, dreams and fears evoked against the agonizing ordeal of the dancing, was also mined some years later in a film based on Horace McCoy's novel, "They Shoot Horses, Don't They?" It won an Oscar for Jane Fonda. The Lion Theater Company's revival of "Marathon '33" opens tonight for 16 showings in the first local appearance of the project since the original production by the Actors Studio. Garland Wright, who staged the current "Vanities," has directed a cast of over 40 actors and musicians. Performances are Tuesday through Saturday at 8 P.M. and Sunday at 3 P.M. through Sept. 19. Reservations: 947-4224. The theater is at 422 West 46th Street, between Ninth and Tenth Avenues.

New Film Makers Series Set for Whitney Sept. 14

"Lost Lost Lost (Diaries, Notes & Sketches, Reels 1-6)," a film by the avant-garde movie maker and critic Jonas Mekas, will lead off the seventh season of the Whitney Museum's New American Film Makers Series.

Playing from Sept. 14 through Sept. 19, "Lost Lost Lost" begins with Mr. Mekas's arrival in the United States in 1949 after several years in European displaced person camps. Such figures of the cultural world of the 50's and early 60's as the late Frank O'Hara, Allen Ginsberg, LeRoi Jones and Robert Frank are seen in the film as Mr. Mekas traces his own life and times.

The 13-week schedule of films at the Whitney, arranged by John G. Hanhardt, curator of film and video, and Mark Segal, will subsequently offer, among other works, Dineen: The People, a documentary on the Navajo made by two Berkeley film-makers, Jonathan Reinis and Steven Hornick; "Kristina Talking Pictures," the third feature film by Yvonne Rainer, the dancer and choreographer; "Independence Day," a feature by Bobby Roth about a young black couple who have just moved from the South to Los Angeles, and "Three Narratives," consisting of short films by Sally Heckel, Elodie Keene and Susan Seidelman.

The New American Film Series is assisted with funds from the Jerome Foundation, the National Endowment for the Arts and the New York State Council on the Arts.

To Venice, with music

Noted Musicians To Aid Venice

PARIS, Sept. 1 (Agence France-Press)—In addition to musicians from Paul McCartney's Wings pop group, Ravi Shankar, the sitar player, and other well-known musicians have agreed to perform free of charge in St. Mark's Square, Venice, this month to raise funds for the restoration of the city.

In a week of concerts from Sept. 19 to 26, organized jointly by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the Venice city authorities, there will be rock and Indian music, flamenco and classical music.

Among other musicians who will take part are the Mexican violinist Henryk Szeryng, the French flutist Jean-Pierre Rampal, the Brazilian singer Jorge and the American singer and songwriter Mort Shuman.

Custom-Gershwin Desk Gives Glimpse of Genius

Special to The New York Times
To Gershwin in "moments of extreme inspiration." Donald Leavitt, acting chief of the music division of the Library of Congress, which lent the desk to the gallery for the exhibition, thinks the desk is "real Art Deco," a "beautiful representative of the kind of elegant furnishings found in the white-telephone movies of the 30's" the ones, he added, that captured that Hollywood era of opulence and luxury. Hanging above the desk, in further testimony to the composer's growing fascination with modern art and design, during the last years of his life, is a self-portrait, somewhat satirical, dated 1934. The painting, one of several Gershwin self-portraits was donated to the gallery in 1966. Among the Gershwin paintings at the Library of Congress is his famous portrait of Arnold Schoenberg, the composer who orchestrated three of Gershwin's five piano preludes.

'Bridgroom' Set For Broadway

"The Robber Bridegroom," the musical that was well received here last fall when it was part of the repertory of the Harkness Theater, is coming back to Broadway for a regular engagement. It will open at the Biltmore Oct. 6, with previews starting Sept. 27. The production will once again be directed by Gerald Freedman, but it will have new principal actors. Barry Bostwick, the leading man in the original company of "Grease," will star in the title role, with Rhonda Collier and Barbara Lang featured. Lawrence John Moss, Stephen Vinovich and Ernie Sabella round out the principals in the show.

Joan Collins "A waspish highwaywoman"

From the rear, heroes fall into through-of-mature. The movie hangs loosely around several episodes from the novel. Tom, as a baby, is discovered deposited in the square's bed; he is brought up as a beloved but illegitimate son. He is snubbed and abused by his nasty half-brother, Bill, he is pronounced legitimate and marries Squire Western's daughter at the end.

Cohabitation and the Courts: The Stigma Is Beginning to Fade

By LAWRENCE VAN GELDER
American courts, responding to the sexual revolution, have begun to remove the stigma of judicial disapproval in some cases involving the increasing numbers of men and women living together while remaining unmarried. In a profound but not yet pervasive change manifest in two classes of cases affecting individuals who have been divorced, some courts have done an about-face in the last decade.

At the same time, the penchant of many Americans for shunning marriage for a variety of reasons, while settling into quasi-marital living arrangements, is beginning to embroil some of these couples in legal disputes previously typical of married couples bent on divorce. Still others are pressing for rights previously accorded only the married. Among these cases, which raise the philosophic if not always the legal question of whether those who shun marriage should be entitled to its protections, the most extreme involves the actor Lee Marvin, who is being sued for a share of his property by a woman with whom he had lived for six years.

In her lawsuit, Michelle Triola, who changed her last name legally to Marvin, raises the question of whether property acquired during a relationship in which a couple lived as though husband and wife should not be divided equally when the relationship ends, despite the absence of a formal marriage or any belief that there was a marriage.

In a lawsuit, which is expected to be decided soon by the California Supreme Court, Miss Marvin's lawyer, Marvin Mitchelson, asserts that she and the actor entered into an oral agreement. Its terms, according to the brief, were that during the time that they lived together, they would combine their earnings and share equally in any property accumulated; that they would hold themselves out as husband and wife, and that Miss Marvin would serve Mr. Marvin as companion, homemaker, housekeeper and cook.

The lawsuit also asks if this agreement should be denied enforcement as contrary to public policy on the ground that one party is furnishing "illicit" consideration, although this consideration, by Miss Marvin, "is the performance of typically spousal services."

Mr. Mitchelson has taken the position that the law should move away from the classic concepts of marriage and divorce and apply principles of marriage and divorce to lasting relationships. The assertion of an agreement in the Marvin case opens the way for a decision by the court on theories not of marriage but of contract. Nevertheless, the case is being watched closely by many lawyers and not a few cohabitants.

Although valid up-to-date statistics on the number of people living together without being married are unavailable, there is no reason to believe that the next census will fail to show as dramatic an increase as the last in the category the Census Bureau calls "Partners of the Opposite Sex Sharing Living Quarters." In 1960, the Census Bureau estimated that number at 17,000. In 1970, it put the number at 143,000, a more than eight-fold increase.

What is clear is that age is no barrier to cohabitation. Its practitioners are as likely to be the elderly combining Social Security checks as couples in their 20's who eschew the idea of licensing their love as people who are paying for previous marriages and who cannot or will not enter that state again.

Gone, however, is much of the reticence that surrounded such arrangements when they existed in a less liberal sexual climate. And in the absence of that reticence there has developed an environment hospitable to disputes that are finding their way into lawyers' offices and the courts. In an era of relative affluence, cohabiting couples who come to a parting of the ways are likely to have property—furniture, cars, television, and stereo equipment—or obligations, like leases, worth arguing.

Most of these disputes are settled by the parties. Some are settled by lawyers. A few find their way into court, mainly into small claims courts, where they are difficult to distinguish from other litigation, although some court personnel have had experience with them.

Some Alimony Halted

But it is much easier to distinguish two classes of cases that find their way into higher courts. In one of these, some courts are suspending or terminating alimony payments by the divorced husband when his former wife is shown to be living with another man.

In the second type, some courts are refusing to change the custody of children when the custody is challenged on the ground that the custodial parent is "living in sin."

A case in the cohabitation and custody category, which was decided last year in Minnesota, provides one of the most dramatic illustrations of flux, coincidence and collision in recent years in personal and judicial attitudes toward cohabitation.

A divorce, which took place in 1968, involved the parents of two boys who were then 5 and 8 years old. At that time, their mother was living with a man other than her husband. And the court observed that she "felt she was not worthy to have her two sons because of her religious convictions that such a relationship was sinful."

The boys went to live with their father. In the intervening years, the mother remarried and had two more children. The boy's father began to live with another woman.

Father Wins Again

The court, in refusing to return the children to the mother, observed that "The mother did not object to the father's care of the children until his fiancée began living in the home. The mother feels the father's present living arrangement is unstable because they are 'living in sin.'"

In reaching its decision, the court said: "This court does not believe it is necessary to either condemn or condone any relationship, but it is necessary that the court assess the quality of the relationship between the adults as it affects the child. Some marriages are not stable environments in which to raise children, and some informal relationships are very stable and can provide the emotional, psychological and physical security necessary to raising children."

The court noted that the children "were originally placed with their father because of the mother's illicit relationship."

"Now the tables are turned," the ruling said, "and the court is asked to disrupt the children because of their parents' changing social life. With an increasing number of the mother's mode of or considers it to be contrary to good morals, but when the child is best located with the mother and then behaved and cared for."

With regard to alimony, though most states do not recognize common-law marriage, some courts and legislatures are terminating alimony when there is cohabitation with a person of the opposite sex and when the divorced woman is supporting herself out of the spoils of the man she is with. Under California, the relationship must last for 30 days. Some courts indicate that alimony resumes with the relationship ended.

The courts had no part in binding the couples, but they're involved with the separations—They're being asked to resolve issues of property and obligations that once were argued only by husbands and wives.

Doesn't Anyone Out There Need a Soft Bathtub?

By RITA REIF

Now there are two soft bathtubs.

But unlike Claes Oldenburg's "Soft Bathtub" sculpture of a decade ago, Babette Newburger's is intended as a tub to bathe its owner.

Despite its usefulness, however, it hasn't been as widely appreciated as Oldenburg's foam-rubber stuffed vinyl lump, which if not loved, is lionized by many.

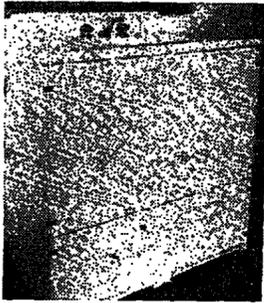

So far the people Mrs. Newburger has tried to persuade to buy her patented design—a combination vanity-sink and foldup tub—have looked at it, praised it and left without placing an order.

"It's so frustrating," Mrs. Newburger reported the other day after a recitation of the happenings since 1970 when she first conceived of a soft tub as an appliance that, she reasoned, some people—including poor people, construction workers, yacht and vacation-time house owners—must need.

It was not the first tub that she had designed. But it did represent her premiere performance as a socially concerned designer of an appliance that architects would take seriously. Her other tubs were chic and widely publicized because they were wittily conceived human legs fashionably curvaceous, had for underpinnings (very like those she had used to shore up table tops) and were the first such vessels anyone had ever seen that were executed in see-through acrylic plastic.

It was 1968, Mrs. Newburger recalled. And fashion photographers saw to it that every model bathed publicly that year.

"Porcelain tubs are costly and not pleasant to the touch," she observed. "The ordinary rigid plastic tubs are impossible to clean. But soft plastic is so-o-o soothing. It's safe too; it's comfortable, extremely easy to clean and the least costly of all possible materials."

Mrs. Newburger designed her bath to be a space saver. "In mobile homes the bathroom fixtures are spread all over," she said. "They take up too much space. If the tub was housed in the base of the vanity as in my design, that problem would be partially solved."

She was even more concerned about introducing baths into the millions of homes that have none.

But, as Mrs. Newburger discovered, the plumbing manufacturers were not interested in such designs for slum housing, or in any product that would require them to switch gears and make costly investments in new manufacturing equipment.

"I've shown this prototype to a hundred people," she said, giving the vanity base a tug and pulling the tub easily from its mooring. The demonstration, held in the bedroom of her apartment-studio at 180 East 79th Street, was swift and efficient.

"There are two possible markets for this tub," she said with conviction citing both: "The first is wherever portability is important—in disaster areas, on construction sites in Saudi Arabia, in hospitals for patients too weak to be brought to the plumbing.

And then, she explained, there would be places where the luxury or convenience of an extra bath would become a status symbol.

"I'm convinced that it will be the second bath in a home before it will be the first," she said. (Emilio Ambasz, who resigned recently as curator of design of the Museum of Modern Art, agrees. He encouraged Mrs. Newburger in her efforts and even suggested that Pirelli, the Italian rubber producer, might make the prototype. But he never shared her belief that the plumbing idea would solve low-income housing's bathroom needs.

"The poor do not always want what others say they should," he observed. "They want what others have.")

And so Mrs. Newburger is now trying to reach the poor of the world through those endowed with more. This is the Rolls-Royce design of its kind," she said emphatically. "Just think of it—a tub of bullet-proof plastic. It's the same material they use for the oil balloons they pull behind the tankers . . ."

It's Back to School—All the Way Back to 150 Years Ago

By GEORGIA DULLEA

This is the week for school clothes buying, an activity that ranks down there with long division on the fun scales of some pupils. Why, then, were those children smiling in Gimbel's the other day?

The reason for the unseasonal good will in the children's clothing department turns out to be something called the Old Sturbridge Village Schoolhouse, which is open through Saturday. And the idea behind the schoolhouse is that parents may shop for back-to-school things or whatever while their offspring may go back in time to learn what school was like 150 years ago.

They can, for example, do sums on slates, listen to stories with very heavy morals, or play board games like Fox and Geese, the fox being a kernel of corn, and the geese a handful of kidney beans.

"It was hard being the fox," 10-year-old Stephanie Herman observed the other afternoon upon cashing in her corn after a game against Margaret Platt, whom she termed "a very good player."

No wonder she's good. Mrs. Platt, an earnest young woman with a white bonnet tied under her chin, is one of eight staff members recently transplanted from Old Sturbridge Village, the recreated Massachusetts farming community, to the Gimbel's Schoolhouse.

Now, calling it a schoolhouse is stretching a promotional point. There are no old oak desks, mind you, no inkwells for dipping pigtailed into, no potholed slates and no hickory sticks. But there is a caseful of antique toys and dolls, a revolving cast of schoolmasters and mistresses and, starting today, a spinner and a musician, who will pass out plastic flutes to the young "visitors."

"Gimbels calls them customers but we call them visitors," stressed Lawrence Morrison, public information director for Old Sturbridge.

Over in a corner, several such visitors were just settling down on wooden cubes for a story by John Stevens, who was decked out in high-waisted trousers and nifty suspenders. Reading from a circa 1830 children's book entitled, "The Faithful Dog," Mr. Stevens sought to bridge a century or so by asking cheerfully:

"Any of you have dogs?"

One by one the children shook their heads. Stuart Newman, 7, informed him that dogs were banned at Co-op City, where he lives. And a redhead named Mark, who looked to be about 3, volunteered the intelligence that "I have a sister."

Magic Show Follows

Luckily, it was not necessary to have a dog or even a sister to appreciate the story, which was followed by a magic show, a Punch and Judy production, and games such as Hunt the Slipper.

If there seems to be mere skylarking than arithmetic going on in the Old Schoolhouse this week, there may be some historical justification, according to the resident school teachers. Then, as now, recess was the favorite subject.

But the games played were "very sexist," Mrs. Platt added, frowning as she flipped through a copy of "The American Girl's Book." What little boys called Musical Chairs was known as Str the Mush when played by little girls. And the toys were just as bad. "Curatorially, this is called a Boy's Top and Handle," Mr. Morrison said. Then, nodding to a circle of twirling girls, he chuckled and talked of "how times change."

Why, the girls outnumbered the boys at the colonial workbench where Christina Nicholson was making whimsical wooden toys including a many-jointed "Shingle Man" doll that dances.

Impressed by Dolls

Shoshanna Wind, 9, was most impressed. "It can do all kinds of things that our dolls can't," Shoshanna said.

And 7-year-old Arthur Butts who wore a P.S. 40 T-shirt, inquired with more than polite interest, as to how long it would take to make one of those tiny toys.

"Oh, a couple of hours," Miss Nicholson replied.

"A couple of hours!" cried Arthur, looking crushed.

"They didn't have any power tools then," the woodworker explained with a small smile. "They could still make some pretty neat stuff, though."

Not neat enough for Gideon Berger, Gideon, a 10-year-old child of the 20th century had sneaked up to the toy department and indulged himself with another Hot Wheels miniature car. He now has 72, at home in Buffalo.

But then Gideon has already been to the real Old Sturbridge Village. Children who haven't may enjoy the Gimbel's version, which is open on the second floor today and Friday, from 11:30 A.M. to 3:30 P.M. and on Saturday from 11:30 A.M. to 2:30 P.M.

Anyway, it beats trying on school clothes.

PRODUCTION LAID ON FLU VACCINES

Types Needed for Federal Program Are Affected

By HAROLD M. SCHNECK JR.
 Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Sept. 1—Figures made public today by the Department of Health, Education and Welfare show that the four manufacturers of swine flu vaccine will be able to deliver by Oct. 1 only about one-quarter of the amount of vaccine they had been expected to make available by that date.

This means that widespread vaccination programs throughout the United States will be delayed beyond Oct. 1 and further complicates the problem of getting most of the adult population vaccinated by the beginning of the next flu season.

Experts say that influenza usually makes its first large-scale appearance in December and January. The national program against the so-called swine flu was to have started in July and August, with immunization of the elderly. Mass immunization of other adults was expected to begin in September so that the bulk of the

before the onset of the flu season.

The figures made public today show that only 20.4 million doses of vaccine will be available by Oct. 1 and that the total available by Nov. 30 will be 113.3 million. There are 143 million Americans over the age of 18. Public health officials recommend the vaccine for all of them.

Insurance a Factor

The new estimates of vaccine availability were disclosed by Secretary F. David Mathews of H.E.W. in a letter sent to all four flu vaccine manufacturers, urging them to re-examine their delivery capabilities.

In the letter, he told the manufacturers that their current estimates of vaccine delivery by Oct. 1 were 74.3 percent below their earlier projections and that this meant that only 20.4 million doses of packaged vaccine would be available for use by that time.

More than 100 million doses of bulk vaccine had been produced by the early part of this month, but the manufacturers delayed their final packaging because of the insurance industry's refusal to provide liability insurance for participants in the nationwide vaccination program.

The new figures on vaccine delivery were compiled by the

Bridge: Even the Most Skillful Pairs Can Use a Little Bit of Luck

By ALAN TRUSCOTT

Any pair that can score more than 70 percent in a pair event can feel proud of its skill, but must also concede that luck played some part in the triumph. Both factors had a role in the framed deal played by West and Rose Levine of West End, N. J., who won the mixed pair championship at a recent sectional tournament in Point Pleasant, N. J., with a mammoth score.

The normal contract for North-South is surely six diamonds, which makes easily if the diamonds are three-two or if there is a singleton diamond honor in a defender's hand. With the actual distribution, this slam would surely fail, although in the absence of an opening heart lead it can be made double-dummy.

In practice Mr. and Mrs. Levine climbed to six hearts, a much more difficult contract, but one that provides a high score if it succeeds, a significant matter at match points. The right bid for North after a response of one heart to one diamond is far from clear.

Some Possible Bids

A cautious player would bid two diamonds. There is a lot to be said for four diamonds, with a partnership agreement that this shows a highly unbalanced hand with three-card heart support, making it unlikely that three no-trump is desirable.

Mrs. Levine tried three diamonds and gave a preference to four hearts on the next round. South drove on to six hearts, and scored the opening lead of the heart jack. He won in his hand, cashed the spade ace and ruffed a spade. He now ruffed a low diamond and reviewed the situation.

It was tempting to assume that both red suits would break evenly, but that would have been a catastrophe as the cards lay. There was nothing to be done about a bad trump break, but there was a faint chance of neutralizing a bad diamond break.

South Ruffs Spade

Accordingly, South ruffed another spade in dummy, more in the interests of an entry than because he needed the ruffing trick. Now another low diamond was led from the dummy. If East had held a medium-sized trump he would have been able to play it, effectively upturning the declarer. As it was, he discarded and South again ruffed low.

Now the remaining trumps were drawn, and the club ace was still in the dummy as an entry to make diamond tricks, and therefore an over-trick in the slam.

In the post-mortem the defenders could not find any way to defeat the contract, even with the double-dummy lead of the club three, and North asked her partner if they were in the right contract.

"I don't know whether it was right," was the response "but it was right today."

Jersey Watermelon Thief May Get Painful Surprise

METUCHEN, N.J., Sept. 1 (AP)—The search for a thief who made off with 20 watermelons growing on a lot here has proved fruitless.

But if the thief tries to feast on his ill-gotten goods, the police warn, he may be in for a painful surprise.

The watermelons, grown by Willie Grubbs of New Brunswick, were accidentally sprayed with a pesticide too powerful to use on fruit.

Police Chief Joseph Perrino said there were no suspects in the case. "We're just waiting to see if we hear any reports of bad stomachaches," he said.

KEENAN TO ABIDE BY SAYPOL RULING

Prosecutor Will Not Fight Court Transfer of Case

John F. Keenan, the special state prosecutor, said yesterday that he would not appeal a recent court decision transferring the indictment of Justice Irving H. Saypol of State Supreme Court to the Manhattan District Attorney's office.

Mr. Keenan said that the decision for the transfer, by Justice Leonard H. Sandler of State Supreme Court, was consistent with a recent ruling by the State Court of Appeals limiting the special prosecutor's office to "strictly the criminal-justice process or system."

The indictment involves an alleged agreement between Justice Saypol and Manhattan Surrogate S. Samuel DiFalco to steer $20,000 in commissions to the justice's son in exchange for the justice's appointment of a lawyer to a court assignment.

Lawyers for Justice Saypol have denied that the agreement took place and have said that the appointment at issue paid $125.

Earlier this week, defense lawyers asked Justice Sandler to dismiss the Saypol indictment on the ground that since the special prosecutor did not have jurisdiction in the case, he had not had the authority to present evidence before a grand jury. Justice Sandler has reserved decision on this motion.

Lawyers for Mr. DiFalco have raised a similar argument in the Appellate Division. Oral arguments have been scheduled there for Sept. 14.

Meanwhile, there was still no comment from Governor Carey on a suggestion by Justice Sandler that the Governor expand the jurisdiction of the special prosecutor's office. In a recent decision, Justice Sandler had said that the current limits on the office were "artificial."

Official Hurt in Rikers Fight

An assistant warden at the Men's House of Detention on Rikers Island was slightly injured yesterday when he attempted to break up a fight among four inmates. The official, John Pezone, was taken to the City Hospital Center at his low back after the altercation on Block 8. A correction department spokesman said the center was quiet after the fight.

Chess: World Champion Chagrined Over His Games at Montilla

By ROBERT BYRNE

Anatoly Karpov was dissatisfied with his play in the Torneo del Vino in Montilla, Spain, despite his easy victory without a loss. Chagrined over the many errors in his games, he shook his head ruefully and said: "After every move, the games changed hands. I would be winning effortlessly, then make one mistake, answered by a compensating mistake by my opponent, then make another and so on. I could have been on a seasaw."

I think he was exaggerating a bit, for the only game in which he stood worse at any time was his one with Ricardo Calvo, but it is true that the world champion's usually smooth winning technique was not in evidence.

A Case in Point

His second-round game with Juan Bellon of Spain is a case in point. After drawing the fangs of the dangerous Schliemann Gambit by correct opening play, Karpov missed winning a piece, which would have put the game away quickly. Then he managed to mess his two-pawns-ahead end game, losing his material advantage to find himself in a close end game. Finally rallying to exploit his positional superiority, he staggered on to the victory.

Once White removes the cramping black QN with 12 NxB, he is well on his way toward consolidating his king position against attack. Had Bellon proceeded 12... BxN; 13 N-B3, N-N5, he

Nightmares Continue in the Town of Attica

By FRANK GUPTE
Special to The New York Times

N.Y., Sept. 1—Except in special circumstances, the 500-member union urged Mr. Smith to "reassess your position and make a decision as to your capability as continuing as superintendent of this facility or becoming further entwined with the Albany magic of puppyry."

Mr. Smith's terse reply was delivered late this afternoon. "No," he declared, he would not resign and the guards had no business asking him to.

The superintendent also reiterated a decision by Benjamin C. Ward, the State Commissioner of Corrections, that there would be no reprisals or disciplinary measures against the leaders of the strike. The guards had earlier called for such measures.

All through last week the guards were heavily armed—all leaves had been temporarily canceled and canisters of tear gas, and shotguns and other riot equipment was prepared for emergencies.

The resentment of villagers over the publicity surrounding whatever happens at the prison is fueled by the fact that not much else happens in this part of Wyoming County to change its slow, leisurely rural character. Dairy farms stretch for miles here, and the cattle seem so complacent that they do not even turn their heads when cars speed by on the narrow, black-top roads.

The last few days have been unseasonably cold here. But now it is warm again, and on this day brilliant sunshine bathed Attica's huge maples (its elms perished when a tree disease hit the village seven years ago), under whose branches nestle two-story, wooden houses, some of them well-preserved Victorians.

And the sunshine also seemed to add a bit to the relief the villagers feel over the fact that the prisoners' strike turned out to be peaceful—and that the out-of-town news personnel have packed up and left.

"Yes, we all got more than a little up-tight during the strike," said Mayor Stout, who works as a telephone dispatcher in nearby Batavia. "It was the uncertainty about what would happen that was so painful. But now we also have to ask ourselves the questions, 'Is it really over? Will there be another explosion one day soon?' I don't think anyone has the answers."

Books of The Times Lessons and Epiphanies

By RICHARD R. LINGEMAN

THE MASTER AND OTHER STORIES. By Sue Kaufman. 228 pages. Doubleday & Co., $7.95.

Here are two separate books of stories by two different women, selected with no expectation of any relatedness, yet, while preserving their separateness, they touch on things in common, like two workmen in different places who whistle the same tunes. Different writers, different preoccupations, but the melodies are drawn from a common storehouse.

The common storehouse from which these two writers draw is nothing more—or less—than life. One could enumerate certain broad similarities of background, education, class, readership—and, of course, sex—between the two writers, but the main bond between them is simply that of storytellers engaged in a common social function—making stories out of their perceptions, distilling nectar, sweet or bitter, from the blooming profusion of life.

Sue Kaufman's stories unfold from time past to time present, like an undated log of places, events, climate, happenings, meanings; there are no continuing characters, the stories are organized under simple rubrics of movement ("Here," "There," "Here Again"), yet one has a sense of development as writer's time, (Miss Kaufman's own developing knowledge), as well as historical time. The "Here" stories are sketchily dated in the late 1930's and early 40's and concern, mostly, young college women in a town undergoing suburbanization; under "There" are stories of Americans abroad, postcollegiate men and women making their obligatory pilgrimage abroad to soak up the glories of culture, only to meet with meaner truths about themselves; and "Here Again" is about people in later lives concerned with marriage, careers, motherhood, children, adultery. Their cumulative effect is linear, chronological, maturational.

Julie Hayden's stories, on the other hand, comprise a book of illuminations, like a saint's meditation diary. They are shifting glances of light, playing through the water, dappling objects on the bottom with light and shade. They yield up moments of intense illumination, or dance about picking out a pattern. Two focus on young women in the city, chewing on the dregs of affairs, one that is over, the other in which an abortion shatters the woman's days into shards of lacinating, unrelated impressions and memories that hasten her back to her lover at a cocktail party.

In another story, "A Touch of Nature," there are memories of a wartime childhood in a resort town: a self-contained world that is faraway, yet always close. The second half of the book, "The Lists of the Past," is a group of linked stories about a family and the death of its father. One story is mostly about the large home with its huge yard, where the father gardens, repairs, builds, his life organized around an unending series of lists of chores to be done. When he is taken sick, the mother and a daughter wait restlessly for news of the operation, and the mother thinks of the

COMSTOCK EASING PRISON CROWDING

70 Inmates Are Moved Out as Protest Continues

By JOSEPH B. TREASTER
Special to The New York Times

COMSTOCK, N.Y., Sept. 1—As a peaceful inmate protest went into its third day at the Great Meadow State Correctional Facility here, authorities today began dealing with the problem of overcrowding by transferring 70 prisoners to institutions throughout the state.

A spokesman for the state prison system said that altogether 300 prisoners would be transferred from Great Meadow in the next few days, reducing the population to about 1,200.

The spokesman said a similar number of inmates was also being dispersed to other institutions from the Attica Correctional Facility, where for six days ended last Sunday prisoners had refused to leave their cells for meals and work, which many are now doing at Great Meadow.

After slightly worsening yesterday, the protest at Great Meadow seemed to have eased markedly this morning as nearly half of the prisoners left their cells for breakfast. On the first day of the protest, Monday, only 206 inmates went to the mess hall for the morning meal; yesterday the number was 435.

Officials at the prison, 60 miles northwest of Albany, say the reason for the protest remains a mystery. Yesterday afternoon the superintendent, Paul Metz, asked members of the inmates, a spokesman for their grievance committee to circulate in the institution and try to get an explanation from the inmates, a spokesman for the prison system said.

Requests by reporters to enter the prison were again rejected by Mr. Metz.

Hypocrisy at the U.N.

On the initiative of Cuba and a few other self-styled "nonaligned" nations, the United Nations Decolonization Committee seems headed for its annual exercise in hypocrisy concerning the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico. Last year, after strenuous lobbying by Ambassador Daniel P. Moynihan, the 24-nation committee shelved by a narrow margin a resolution that would have pompously affirmed "the inalienable right of the people of Puerto Rico to self-determination and independence."

Adding to the problem now faced by the United States and Puerto Rican Governments at the United Nations is the Ford Administration's inertia in reacting to the unanimous recommendation last year by a joint commission, appointed by the two Governments, for a "Compact of Permanent Union" that would enlarge considerably Puerto Rico's already substantial political autonomy.

Had President Ford pushed vigorously in Congress for enactment of the compact, uninformed U.N. members might have come to understand the unique commonwealth status. As matters stand, the Cubans can cite the stalled compact as evidence of Washington's unwillingness to expand the self-governing capacities of Puerto Rico's three million people.

Yet, any U.N. delegate willing to examine the facts will know that the Puerto Ricans have exercised their inalienable right to self-determination—continue in reality to exercise it in free elections—and that the advocates of independence regularly get a very small percent of the votes. In a 1967 referendum on the island's status, pro-independence forces mustered exactly 0.4 percent against 60 percent for the Commonwealth and 39 percent for statehood.

In the last general election in 1972, the Puerto Rican Independence Party won 4.5 percent, its highest poll since 1956. Because of high unemployment, it may do better this November, though the election as usual will be fought out primarily between the pro-commonwealth Popular Democrats of Gov. Rafael Hernandez Colon and the pro-statehood New Progressive Party.

New nations that struggled for their independence against a colonial power may find it difficult to understand commonwealth status. And countries that never permit free elections will always try to discredit them. But the basic facts about Puerto Rico ought to impress any U.N. delegate interested in authentic self-determination and not merely in helping Fidel Castro and a handful of discredited Puerto Rican malcontents stir up trouble for the Commonwealth and the United States.

Carter and the Bishops

The dialogue between the Roman Catholic hierarchy and Jimmy Carter on the issue of abortion has left the candidate's stand inconclusive. The discussion with six Catholic Bishops ended as it began. Mr. Carter maintained his personal opposition to abortion, but he declined, as he has consistently done, to support a constitutional amendment that would repeal the Supreme Court decision affirming the right of women to undergo such operations. He said, however, that he would not oppose efforts by others to so amend the Constitution.

Though it is clear that the abortion issue touches the deepest beliefs of millions of Americans, we have substantially less trouble with the issue than does Mr. Carter. The Supreme Court decision seemed to us right, not just because it affirmed the most intimate of privacy rights but also because, in practice, it simply made safe abortions as available to the poor as they had long been to rich women. As a result, hundreds of thousands of poor women—many of them from inner-city communities—have been able to terminate unwanted pregnancies and incidentally to avoid the terrible social costs of unwanted children.

Thus it is somewhat troubling to note that Governor Carter indicated a willingness to consider trimming his already finely honed position on this issue by agreeing to give further study to the Bishops' proposals for a "partial" amendment on abortions. The only "partial" amendments mentioned thus far would either ban termination of pregnancies altogether or throw the matter back to the states. Since it is clear, as a practical matter, that no total ban on abortions can be enforced, both of the partial amendments suggest a throwback to the bad old days where the choice for poor women was to bear unwanted children or to resort to back-alley abortion mills.

Thus, though Governor Carter is to be commended for facing up to the issue by discussing his differences directly with the Bishops, his position as it emerged from the talks is so ambiguous that it not only invites further pressure from anti-abortion forces but provides little leadership guidance on a highly controversial issue which has such far-reaching consequences for American society.

No Midnight Librarians

The unanimous decision by the United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit, covering the Middle West, should place school boards in every section of the country on notice that it is not their function or right to remove books from school library shelves which, for some reason, displease them.

In sporadic bursts of ideological or literary censorship, school boards—including, most recently, one in Suffolk County—have acted as midnight librarians, furtively cleaning up the stacks after the professionals have gone home. Armed with lists of books they frequently had not read themselves, except for spot checks of a few offending passages, these vigilantes overrule teachers and librarians. Since school boards change periodically, one year's literature may be another year's pornography.

The fact that a book is on the school shelves need not mean that all librarians or teachers join in agreement on its values. Under such a test, atheists might ban the Bible and self-appointed censors would remove controversial books that, with time, have become classics. "A library is a storehouse of knowledge," the court held—a sound definition of which school board meetings across the country might take note.

Discovering the Parks

Public opinion polls consistently report that conditions in the national parks—and conservation issues generally—are of concern to a wide spectrum of voters. It is not surprising, therefore, that as President Ford seeks to win election in his own right, he should manifest a sudden enthusiasm for the national parks.

The parks, including Yellowstone, which Mr. Ford visited this week, have experienced the bad as well as the good effects of the tourism explosion. Overcrowding, crime, vandalism, polluted air—the very conditions that city people journey to the national parks to escape—have become common in the more accessible and better-known sections of the park system.

The National Park Service of the U.S. Department of the Interior in recent years has repeatedly petitioned the Office of Management and Budget and the White House for additional funds to cope with these new pressures. Unfortunately, neither the O.M.B. nor the White House has been responsive to these requests. In both of the budgets he has submitted, President Ford asked for substantially less money for staffing, maintenance and land acquisition than the Park Service has sought and than conservation organizations regarded as necessary.

In fiscal 1976, for example, the Park Service asked for $397 million, the President budgeted $304 million and Congress—over Administration objections—raised that figure to $312 million. Again, in the new fiscal year beginning Oct. 1, the President asked for $337 million, substantially less than the Park Service had requested, and Congress raised it to $355 million.

The Fish and Wildlife Service has a special fund to buy wetlands for migratory birds. Last year, Congress appropriated $7.5 million for the fund and this year $4 million. In both years, the Ford Administration asked that nothing be appropriated for this purpose.

Against this background, the President's discovery that the parks and wildlife refuges require additional money for land acquisition seems to have more to do with Mr. Ford's political needs than with the needs of the parks, which have not changed much since January when his last budget was submitted. The same is true of his decision that the understaffed Park Service requires 1,500 more employees now than he thought it did then.

President Ford initially generated confusion when he asserted that his recommendations would "more than double" the number of acres in the parks and wildlife refuges: The sum he mentioned for land acquisition would fall far short of that target. Interior Department officials subsequently explained that Mr. Ford was merely referring to the 32 million acres in Alaska that have been reserved for parks and refuges under the Alaskan Native Claims Act of 1971 but not yet actually established. A program authorized five years ago hardly constitutes a new initiative. It is also unclear how the President relates his land acquisition program to the far more ambitious bill now nearing enactment in Congress.

An eleventh-hour conversion is better than none at all. But President Ford's pledge would carry more conviction had he shown by word and deed in the last two years that he really cared about national parks and wildlife refuges.

Vote for New York

After a generally lethargic summer, New Yorkers are heading into the final critical weeks of a primary election campaign that could significantly influence the ability of this city and state to survive acute fiscal crises and move toward economic recovery.

Although there are many important questions on which individual candidates should be tested, the overriding issue in the Sept. 14 primary and subsequent November general election is whether New Yorkers will turn out in sufficient numbers to reassert effective control over the political process. If they do not, the returns will be dominated once more by the bloc voting of special interests groups—political machines, labor unions, etc.—whose resulting power and influence over even the most well-intentioned public officials will then continue to distort public priorities and undermine confidence in the integrity of government, thus jeopardizing the city's and the state's gains in the battle against bankruptcy.

Recent election reforms, including registration by mail and a drastic shortening of the time required for registration prior to a primary, have significantly improved opportunities for New Yorkers to participate in this year's balloting. Although registration in the city—about 2.5 million at the beginning of the year—still falls far short of the estimated 3.5 to 4 million eligible voters, registration drives by concerned civic groups, taking advantage of the new simplified procedures, have begun to build a significantly broader voter constituency, especially in minority districts.

There is no longer any excuse for the kind of appallingly low turnout two years ago that enabled one Democratic Assembly candidate in the Bronx to gain his district's nomination with a vote of 900 out of a total vote that was less than 2,000 when a Manhattan district of equal size had a turnout in excess of 8,000.

Registration, however, is only the minimal first step toward responsible citizenship. In the two weeks ahead, every registered voter ought to seek information on all the candidates running in his or her district—for the United States Senate, for Congress, for the State Legislature, for local judgeships and for one City Council seat—assess the character and policies of each, and then go to the polls to vote. Only by a massive turnout of the general electorate can New York be freed from the demeaning and destructive grip of narrow interests.

Sea Law: Pitfalls of U.S. Concessions

To the Editor:
Your otherwise excellent Aug. 30 editorial on the impasse in the Law of the Sea negotiations goes too far in chiding the United States for failing to come forward with "concrete new proposals" to further implement the "dual track" mining system endorsed by Secretary Kissinger last spring.

What the editorial fails to take into account is the flow of the negotiations themselves and the impact of the constructive effort made by the United States at the New York session last spring to arrive at a reasonable compromise on deep-sea mining issues, largely embodied in the Committee I text that emerged from that session. Indeed, that text may have gone too far, too fast for the more extreme members of the Group of 77.

While it is true that the New York text needed further work, the fact remains that, instead of negotiating follow-on issues at the current session, the leaders of the Group of 77 seem bent on undoing the earlier New York compromise and moving the text back toward an international seabed authority with monopolistic control over the deep-sea area.

In the present context, "concrete new proposals" are likely to be seized and gobbled up as further concessions, leading not to meaningful negotiations but only to the same old question:

"What are you going to give us next?"
Deploable as the present impasse is, Secretary Kissinger during his visit will be wise not to offer anything concrete unless something equally concrete can be bargained for in return.

Also, your editorial inadvertently may have lent weight to the argument of some developing countries that they will be better off to take their chances with a new Administration in January that may be "softer" toward third-world demands than the present one is. Such countries should remember that it was a Democratic Congress that overwhelmingly passed the U.S. 200-mile fisheries bill and that the new Congress is unlikely to diverge sharply from its present view of the U.S. national interest. This, insofar as Committee I issues are concerned, can best be summed up as follows: Unless part of the compromise negotiated with the developing world guarantees access for developed countries to deep-sea mining sites under reasonable terms, the United States will simply go it alone, licensing U.S. companies to mine in what the Congress, at least, still views as the traditionally open "high seas" area—regardless of what a new Administration might offer, which in itself is by no means clear.

Of School Staffs

To the Editor:
In its praise of the State Supreme Court decision voiding the St. Goodman Law (editorial, Aug. 25) Times repeats the self-serving that has appeared in all its editions on the subject since it disallowed the Stavisky-Goodman Law change—The Times changed its about it. The proposed law sought merely to protect state responsibility, from the disproportionate cuts meted out by the city during the past year law enacted did just that, by dating a stable ratio between allocated to education and its budget as a whole, whatever budget turned out to be.

The Times errs, too, in claiming "normal attrition should reduce number of layoffs threatened Board of Education in answer court ruling." The 3,500 layoffs announced by the board are layoffs, with that number of layoffs going out. Attrition accounts another 2,500 positions, so a "austerity" budget imposed by the board will result in a 6,000 positions lost—on top of teacher and 9,000 other educational positions lost in the last fiscal year will now be trying to open schools with roughly the same of teachers as were employed early 1960's, when there were students and when the nature student population demanded services than those sorely by, and now denied to, the larger of disadvantaged youngsters city schools today.

Instead of advocating an in necessary funds and service Times calls on teachers to modest benefits freely negotiated collective bargaining and I mealy-mouthed call on City understand that education: given the highest priority... it is naive in the extreme to that City Hall, having thus ignored the Legislature thus heed The Times. And it is naive to think that teachers, according to The Times' own June—put aside their personal sion to cope magnificently devastated school system, render raises they have earned hope that their sacrificial further layoffs.

The Times should be in a Stavisky-Goodman. The count not over.

Wrong Energy Path

To the Editor:
One need not be an apologist for the oil companies, or a partisan Democrat or Republican but only a concerned American to read with incredulity the news report (Aug. 25) that the General Accounting Office, along with many in Congress, favors increasing our imports of fuel from the Arab world, while at the same time is against Federal programs for demonstrating and developing synthetic fuel processes.

It seems impossible that America must allow itself to be backed up against a wall by those whom Russell Baker has termed the "bottom liners," whose only view of the country's future is today's balance sheet. But while such little men cast long shadows over our future, we find ourselves unable to convert the nation's almost two trillion tons of coal, sufficient to supply us with energy for several hundreds of years, while importing in excess of 40 percent of our energy needs and proposing much larger imports in the future.

Energy conservation should and must be practiced, at the same time that all approaches to efficient energy utilization are pushed, including the development of gasification, liquefaction and refined coal processes. These technologies exist and can be carried out in an ecologically sound and environmentally acceptable manner. They need only be improved, demonstrated and commercialized. The gas and oil wells will dry up, and one wonders on whom the blame will fall when the country has to surrender or fight to meet its needs.

Two-Wheeled Underdogs

To the Editor:
As a bicycle rider I deeply resent the diatribes being thrown about lately against myself and my fellows. We have enough troubles as it is on New York streets trying to dodge the Yellow Menace (the taxi) and the Perilous Pot-hole, not to mention those vicious pedestrians who insist on ignoring us as we attempt to ride through a green light.

It is patently obvious that the odds are set in favor of the pedestrian and the motorist. The former has sole possession of the sidewalks, and the latter lords over the roads, while the heroic cyclist, who sets an example of physical fitness and wastes not a drop of petroleum, must suffer the indignity of skimming the curb.

There has been an increasing need for a city-length bicycle and people path. It's time we became less auto-oriented and more interested in attracting people to what could easily become a quieter and less polluted metropolis.

To March in the Night

To the Editor:
As a soldier in the U. S. Army during World War II, I read with disgust the letters from two of your correspondents in The Times of Aug. 24, printed under the heading, "Midnight Parades: Insanity."

The music of the V.F.W. bands no doubt was annoying to these two, but parades of this sort and in the late evening hours occur infrequently. And one other thing should be remembered:

The men who were parading represent a segment of society which has fought and died so that the writers of these letters can enjoy living on the "quiet residential upper East Side"; they can do "the park thing," with wine, pretty ladies and music more to their liking. They can do these things under the conditions of a peace they do not deserve.

Swedish 'Liability'

To the Editor:
Your reporter covering the so-called Nonaligned Conference in Sri Lanka captured an important insight in his reference to a Yugoslav representative's effort to explain why Sweden could only be a "guest" rather than a "participant" in the conference (news story Aug. 20). Despite Sweden's generous foreign aid policy, occasional criticism of U.S. foreign policy and progressive domestic social and economic programs, Sweden persists in having a disqualifying liability (to these moralists)—a free constitution with protection of individual rights. Imagine the embarrassment of most nonaligned governments at accepting a government where domestic critics may actually denounce the government, defeat its proposals in parliament and maybe even dismiss the government after an election.

Such "disrespect" toward political leadership is extremely rare in the third world and never could happen in Yugoslavia. Sweden just does not measure up.

Where Sisterhood Isn't Powerful

blame most of their adult problems—from acne to sexual frustration—on the nuns who taught them in parochial schools. The attitude toward nuns by Catholics, male and female, has tended to be patronizing. Even when credit is given for the accomplishments of nuns, it is often begrudging and minimal.

The strength of the Catholic church in America is due more to nuns than any single group, and under "single group" I include the hierarchy, the clergy and the laymen. Catholic church history has never been too popular a subject with American Catholics but when future, non-sexist, historians probe further into the church of the 19th and early 20th century, perhaps long-overdue recognition will be given to the American nuns—their common sense, their hard work, their vision.

To them must be credited the success of the parochial school system, which is undoubtedly the most important factor in the quality—and quantity, too, for that matter—of American Catholicism. Catholic higher education for women resulted from their efforts, as did a still vital chain of hospitals, and institutions of specialized care for the young, the aged, the homeless. Progressive movements in the church, particularly social action, would never have outgrown the theory stage without them.

So what happened? Many American sisters simply got fed up with their second-class citizenship, fed up with a lack of appreciation of their essential role in the life of the American church, fed up with seeing reforms change the superficialities of their lives but not the basic inequalities. In less than a decade, the number of American nuns dropped from 181,000 to 130,000, and the decline has by no means stopped.

Even more disturbing for the future has been the decrease in the number of women entering religious life—in most religious orders only a handful compared to a steady onrush of applications in the 1950's. Many of those who have stayed understandably seem to have lost something of their one-time enthusiasm. Today, the distinction between the nun and the mature single woman in the world is subtle. Some argue that the only major difference is in the realm of security and other material benefits and that the nun's life may even be preferred.

Fortunately, for the future of the Catholic church in America, there is a solution—and as far as I can see, the only solution. There is a way of recapturing the spirit of dedication that built the church in America. There is a way of once more making American nuns the dynamic center of a revitalized church. The way, of course, is ordination of women. (Not that all nuns, any more than all women, want to be priests—they want to be able to be priests.)

I submit that not until women are given their rightful place in the church will we be able to once again expect from nuns the zeal, the leadership, the inspiration, that proved so fruitful in the past. All other attempts at solving the problems of the American Catholic church are bound to fail unless the basic problem is met. Unless the men who run the church are completely blinded to what is happening or are too warped by their sexist prejudices, ordination of women cannot be long delayed.

The Future of Black Colleges

are threatened by narrow interpretations of court-ordered desegregation of higher education, growing out of the Adams v. Richardson decision, and they continue to be short-changed by states in comparison with white institutions. The private, predominantly black institutions suffer severely from competition for students, faculty and funds with state-supported colleges and wealthier private institutions that are predominantly white.

There is wide disagreement about the future of these institutions. They are seen by some as unneeded carry-overs from the past with no place in an integrated society and as low-quality enterprises that can't match the services now provided to blacks by traditionally white institutions. Others view them as providing unique services to many students and as much improved in educational programs compared with their long, lonely years as the only institutions to which blacks could aspire.

Those who know these institutions best are not inclined to generalize about them, realizing that they have important differences, just like white colleges. But they have a few common denominators: (1) They started because states required segregation and because white colleges would admit blacks only on a token basis; (2) they have suffered as institutions from the same racial attitudes that have denied equality to black individuals in the United States; (3) they are "black" only in the sense of having been founded to serve blacks who were underserved elsewhere, but they are open to all comers and have integrated faculties and some student integration.

I have little sympathy with the view that the so-called black college has no future. One might as well argue that white colleges should be abolished because they, too, can be described primarily in racial terms.

The concept in need of wider understanding than it receives is that racial integration is a two-way proposition, about which most whites think only in terms of blacks joining white institutions. To be fair about it, why shouldn't there be some black institutions that are open to whites? Why should whites monopolize all leadership and all sponsorship of higher education, particularly when there are a hundred institutions in the country that developed through a combination of black initiative and the segregationist imposition of whites? Is it fair or reasonable for whites to say to blacks, who have maintained these colleges through years of ingenuity and sacrifice, that since the whites have recently been good fellows and dropped their segregation laws, the blacks should be good fellows and forget their colleges?

These institutions should not remain static and unchanged. They must change, as must all of higher education, in response to the changes in the country's racial climate, the shifting needs of their students, and developing requirements of American society for education. Over time most of them should attract multiracial enrollment. Some are moving slowly in that direction now. But only by receiving the private and public support they so clearly require and deserve will they be able to meet these challenges. To withhold funds until these adaptations are made would be unfair.

It will be unfair also if the process of integration in these institutions means elbowing aside black leadership, as occurred when many public schools were integrated. Why shouldn't a free and integrated society continue to have some of its institutions—schools, colleges, businesses, churches—run by its minorities? Is it just and reasonable to say to 25 million black people, who have a powerfully unifying experience of two hundred years of suffering combined with many achievements, that the institutions they have built and take pride in no longer matter, that their opportunities for leadership must now be sought solely in what they regard as white institutions, places that fenced them out as inferior until very recently? I think not.

It Started With X-rays

which instills both bewilderment and excitement in the lay mind.

Clearly, the scientific ring of the x is the key to its popularity in the business world. American consumers are impressed with science. Television advertisers play on this fact when they project charts, graphs, and Actual Tests to demonstrate the empirical advantages of their goods. Likewise, corporate christeners rely on a scientific, efficient-sounding brand name to boost a product's sales by at least as much as the endorsement of Leading Doctors or a Laboratory Study.

Such suggestive nomenclature is not necessarily unfair, but it could prove extremely dangerous. Words are far older and more durable than individuals or cultures. Uncomfortable, supposedly dead words can still exert a subtle influence on the present, despite attempts to replace them with euphemisms. In the case of the x, we should beware. As a Latin preposition or prefix, x meant "away from" or "out of." A grim etymological irony follows. The very suffix which makes a product sound automatic, scientific and desirable in America's ostentatious alienation as a "Latin" prefix. Could the current abundance of x's in the marketplace reflect the sense of alienation which is exclusively "technological" and is still to cause in humans? Could continued, unregulated use of the x contribute further to our nation's psychic sickness?

History's answers to these haunting questions may come too late for this generation. But we ought to consider the example set by the ancients who hid the alienating x near the end of the alphabet and prohibited its widespread use. For they certainly acted prudently in a related case. To appreciate their foresight, imagine the disastrous consequences of a massive escape of z's into the atmosphere, engineered by greedy mattress or sleeping pill advertisers. The result would be nothing less than the gradual and total obliteration of life as we know it: not in atomic war or starvation, not in fire or in ice, but in bed, asleep.

The African Kissinger

By Anthony Lewis

United States will not rescue Mr. Smith in any event—that our answer to any Communist threat is a just settlement in Rhodesia. But it will not be so easy for Mr. Vorster to squeeze a Smith who appeals over his head to South Africa's white electorate not to let neighboring whites go down the drain.

It is hard to avoid skepticism when Henry Kissinger calls for majority rule in southern Africa and says the United States, in acting there, "must be true to its own beliefs." For in the Nixon years he played a large part in tilting American policy toward the redoubts of white supremacy in Africa.

Today, for example, the first object of Mr. Kissinger's African policy is a settlement establishing majority rule in Rhodesia. But in 1969 and thereafter, when change might have come less painfully, he encouraged Rhodesia's white minority Government to believe that it would come under no effective pressure for change. An assistant of his at the National Security Council, Roger Morris, met regularly with the unofficial Rhodesian representative in Washington and gave him information.

But the doubts raised by past history should be put aside now by those concerned with the profound human and political problems of southern Africa. It is good to have Mr. Kissinger say that a system based in repression cannot last. It is a good thing that he is meeting again with the area's leading white politician, Prime Minister Vorster of South Africa. It will be better if he finds it possible to visit South Africa himself.

Meeting Mr. Vorster immediately after the riots in South Africa's black townships does carry risks, most of all the danger of seeming to confer respectability on a Government that has reacted to the unrest with such intransigence. Mr. Vorster, despite his bluster at Mr. Kissinger's criticism of South African racial policy, is desperate for any signal of acceptance from the outside world, especially the United States. But Mr. Kissinger is aware of the dangers, and the ways of avoiding them are plain enough.

The first requirement is realism. Mr. Kissinger's African strategy is to dispose of the Rhodesian question first, with Mr. Vorster's help. But the British think he is too optimistic about what Mr. Vorster can do, and they may very well be right. Not even the powerful Mr. Vorster has found it easy to handle the slippery white Rhodesian leader, Ian Smith.

The recent Rhodesian raid into Mozambique is a case in point. Some thought the action was madness, because it might bring the Cubans in, but there may have been method in it. Mr. Smith always portrays the effort to keep the white 5 percent of Rhodesia in control as a struggle for "the free world" against Communism. He would use the threat of Cuban intervention to seek American support.

Mr. Kissinger can deal with that tactic simply by making clear that the

If we are understanding about the political difficulty for Mr. Vorster, we must on the other hand avoid letting him give the impression that he is doing us a favor in pressing the Rhodesians to settle. For it is essentially their bacon that Mr. Kissinger is trying to help save. The white people of South Africa hardly want a full-scale guerrilla war next door, ending in a Communist-influenced Rhodesia.

The danger here is the price that Mr. Vorster will surely try to exact for putting economic pressure on Rhodesia, and for taking further steps toward true independence for Namibia (South-West Africa). That price is American acceptance of the status quo in South Africa.

No such arrangement could be made openly. It would be impossible for any American Government to defend politically at home or in the United Nations. But implicit acceptance would be more than enough for Mr. Vorster, and symbolic gestures could do that.

A visit by Mr. Kissinger to South Africa would be used by its Government to the hilt. But whether it truly symbolized acceptance of the cruelties of the status quo would depend entirely on the way the Secretary of State handled it. If he went with care, without hubris, with an eye for history, he could do much good.

At a minimum, Mr. Kissinger should not go unless assured that Mr. Vorster's Government is going to take significant new action on Rhodesia. His visit would be seen as a concession of a kind, and he must have a quid pro quo.

But beyond that, Mr. Kissinger would have to send some signals on the situation in South Africa itself. He would have to state there, as he has here, our disapproval of apartheid. And he would have to make a point of meeting some of the black leaders whom the Government detests. One would certainly be Chief Gatsha Buthezi, the Zulu leader who has denounced official behavior in the riots. And it would be highly desirable for him to see some black figures who have been banned on political grounds.

In short, a visit could communicate the fact that the United States cares about all the people of South Africa, white and black. That may not seem like much to Americans. But in South Africa, as Robert Kennedy showed ten years ago, there is enormous power in a simple gesture of belief in common humanity.

On putting our money where our mouth is

We've been saying all along that, given a go-ahead by federal and state governments and the courts, America's oil companies would work their tails off to help relieve our country's overdependence on foreign oil—now some 40 percent of the oil the United States uses annually.

After years of frustrating hearings and court battles, the Interior Department finally moved boldly on a key front. Two weeks ago, in an auction in New York City's Statler Hilton Hotel, it opened a portion of the Atlantic—50 to 90 miles off New Jersey—to bidding by the companies for drilling rights. The winning bidders can proceed to get drilling permits providing appellate courts agree that the environment will be properly protected. (As experience indicates it will be: In the Gulf of Mexico and off the California coast, there have been only four serious spills from the more than 20,000 wells drilled in the last quarter century. Each was promptly cleaned up, with no permanent ecological damage.)

No one knows for sure there's oil beneath the U.S. Atlantic (you never can be positive until you drill). But this is one of the few remaining areas where there can at least be real hope. The promising land areas of the United States where the industry could hope to find large reserves have been heavily explored. If this country is to find major new deposits of oil and gas, relieving our dependence on foreign petroleum, it will almost certainly have to be offshore.

The oil companies have been saying this repeatedly. Now the industry has put its money where its mouth is. The Interior Department expected to realize some $600 million in lease bonuses at this auction.

The actual high bids which were accepted on 93 tracts totaled more than $1.1 billion.

And that's only the beginning of what will be needed to explore the tracts. All the lease bonuses really buy is the right of successful bidders to risk additional money on drilling. The companies will need to invest huge sums in exploratory wells, and then in producing wells if oil and gas in commercial quantities are found, and then in pipelines to the shore (again, with adequate protection for the environment). Offshore costs are very high.

We at Mobil are proud to be leaders in the development of America's offshore oil and gas resources, including the latest sale. Yet, our critics have said that we diverted money from the search for energy when we acquired Marcor. They were wrong. Our diversification program, under way since 1968, includes Container Corporation and Montgomery Ward (from the Marcor acquisition), along with real estate development and expansion of our chemical ventures. These were prudent investments so portions of our company would be subject to different business cycles and a different climate of government regulation. But we never forget that our main business is petroleum.

And we repeatedly put our money where our mouth is. In the Gulf of Mexico, since 1970, Mobil has invested more money in lease bonuses—in excess of $1 billion—than any other oil company. And in this latest sale, a bidding group headed by Mobil made the largest single bid for a tract: nearly $108 million. All told, Mobil and its partners spent $274 million. Our company's own outlay on eight tracts came to more than $90 million.

We may be outspoken, especially on energy issues important to our country. But our actions speak even louder than our words.

Toronto a Favorite City of Detroit

Line of Toronto, looming above Lake Ontario, is accented by the 1,815-foot Canadian National Tower. Detroiters are flocking there in ever rising numbers.

By WILLIAM K. STEVENS
Special to The New York Times

TORONTO—The train was almost four feet from Windsor, Ont., when the Detroiters, tense with anticipation for their first glimpse of the jewel of the Great Lakes, saw it. There it was: a shimmering of ivory, gold and ebony skyscrapers above a soft carpet of trees. Lake Ontario, a curious blend of lakefront grandeur and the Boston-Cambridge along the River, all of it accented by the 1,815-foot needle of the new Canadian National Tower, billed as the tallest free-standing structure.

city close to full bloom, like the red roses that are sold for 39 cents on Yonge Street, the funky main thoroughfare, where sidewalk peddlers hawk their wares to unafraid nighttime crowds, and gutter troubadours sing for coins, and tourists mingle freely.

Indeed, the National Geographic magazine has compared today's Toronto to the New York City of half a century ago. Detroiters read that, listen to their friends, feel a hunger for what some of them remember as the bygone glory days of urban America, and get curious.

So up through southern Ontario they come, black and white, city dweller and suburbanite.

Foundations Get Real and Unreal Pleas for Aid

By ISRAEL SHENKER

There are serious and reputable people wanting money from foundations. And then there are the other people, whose hats are in hand, and whose minds seem to have wandered while the lid was off.

"The zaniest thing that ever came to the Rockefeller Foundation got funded," said Henry Romney of the foundation. "It was a proposal from a man whose idea it was to put sound-generating equipment under the subway grating in Times Square, so that people who cross Broadway would be greeted with various kinds of electronically generated sound. Not music. I don't think his purpose is to assault us but to educate us."

Max Neuhaus, this Schubert of the subways who cannot bear the sound of people complaining about noise pollution, wanted $16,279 (later $27,529) to put his equipment in the large subway ventilation chamber under the esplanade at Broadway and Seventh Avenue between 45th and 46th Streets.

That chamber, he explained, "is acoustically so special that it could have been made to order [with] distinctive sound resonances."

Instead of turning a deaf ear, city officials applauded. Dick G. Lam, then the director of the Mayor's Office of Midtown Planning, wrote to the Rockefeller Foundation that "I am working closely with Max Neuhaus [sic]... I believe this concept represents an important step forward toward imaginative innovations."

Deciding that it was worth

"improving the quality of life through aesthetic approach... to reduce abrasive sensory stimuli or to enhance and make them more enjoyable," the foundation awarded Mr. Neuhaus $4,525.

It is hard to imagine the W. K. Kellogg Foundation in Battle Creek, Mich., far from the sensitivities of the East—giving Mr. Neuhaus so much as a box top. It took no time at all for Kellogg to reject the applicant who called attention to the terrible conditions of migrant workers and wanted money to pipe inspirational music to them.

Kellogg's neighbor, the Kresge Foundation in Troy, Mich., was no more generous toward a local of the American Federation of Musicians that wanted to study how much sound their members absorbed.

It is often difficult for petitioners to understand such lack of generosity, since the Kellogg and Kresge Foundations have assets of more than half a billion dollars apiece. The six other foundations in that class are Robert Wood Johnson, Lilly Endowment, Andrew W. Mellon, Pew Memorial Trust and, of course, Ford and Rockefeller.

"The oddest proposals often come from very respectable authorities. They are single-solution proposals from people who think that huge, complicated problems can be corrected in a single way, and it would cost only $7 billion. Seven billion is some-how a magic figure. Saving we don't have seven billion dollars doesn't help. They tell us to get the money."

At the Ford Foundation, an official was ready to oblige when a ten-year-old who became known as Rocket Ship Shapiro asked for money to build a rocket ship. Cutting red tape, a staff member gave him $10.

An older, but less fortunate applicant wanted to dig up buried treasure in Florida and offered 10 percent of the proceeds. Another petitioner needed funds to make what a Ford staffer called "an in-depth study of acupuncture." A patriot wanted help in arranging the Bicentennial event: a human chain to stretch across America and join hands at noon on July 4. Another applicant wanted to explode "peace bombs" over battlefields to render soldiers inert.

Willard Hertz of the Ford Foundation remembered the people who wanted funds to hike across Death Valley, a woman who needed help with her project "Bones Are Beautiful" and a man who wanted to build a 44-story mausoleum. The three projects were not related, nor were they financed.

But the Ford Foundation did sponsor the project of Carlos Varsavsky, whom it described as "a distinguished Argentine astrophysicist," to investigate the idea of a nine-day work week. People would work six days and take three off. Dr. Varsavsky took $10,100 from the foundation and is doubtless working full time on that one.

In three adjoining brown brownstones at 140 East 62d Street, the Mellon Foundation keeps what James M. Morris, a program director there, calls a "low profile. It likes to deal with top educational institutions, leading an ear occasionally to other pleas.

Thus, it provided the money for the concert shell in Central Park. Unaccountably, no requests have come since from people for more shell money. "I bless them for it," Mr. Morris said.

One science-minded petitioner found no foundation prepared to entertain his solution for sleep. He pointed out that fish did not sleep, because their specific gravity was the same as water's, and that they rested all the time. The applicant wanted to experiment with a saline solution of the same specific gravity as man's, so man could sleep in water.

Some foundations are set up specifically to deal with the odd benefit. The Share Your Birthday Foundation encouraged children to give up a birthday present to someone born on the same day. Emerson Andrews, the president emeritus of the Foundation Center, recalls a child from India who brought a baby elephant to a child in Allentown, Pa.

In Kansas, the Emma A. Robinson-Horses' Christmas Dinner Trust Fund was established to provide a bushel of oats or a half bushel of corn crops for each of 200 horses every Christmas. Ford, Rockefeller and certainly Pew would have said nay.

The Major Events of the Day

International

Prime Minister John Vorster said in Johannesburg on the eve of his departure for talks in Zurich with Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger that "moral lessons and threats" from other countries would make no impression on South Africa. His primary target was Mr. Kissinger's speech Tuesday warning apartheid incompatible with human dignity. Mr. Vorster also assailed recent statements by the leader of the South-West African People's Organization, calling for United Nations sanctions against South Africa, as unacceptable. [Page 1, Column 7.]

The Government of Prime Minister Indira Gandhi formally introduced constitutional amendments that would give her sweeping new legislative powers and India's small parliamentary opposition protested bitterly. The President, acting at the Prime Minister's behest, would obtain virtually unlimited power to amend the Constitution further. [1:8.]

National

Representatives of President Ford and his Democratic challenger, Jimmy Carter, agreed to hold the first of a series of three television debates on Sept. 23. They will discuss domestic and economic issues for 90 minutes. The dates and duration of the second and third debates are not set, but the second will be on foreign policy and defense matters and the third was described as "open to discussion on all issues." Their Vice-Presidential running mates, Senator Robert J. Dole and Senator Walter F. Mondale, will hold a television debate between the second and third of the series. [1:8.]

Senate and House conferees working on the tax bill agreed that penalties should be imposed on United States companies that comply with the Arab boycott of Israel. The penalties would be less than in the Senate bill and the actions subject to penalty would be more carefully defined. But the Ford Administration raised the possibility that the bill might be vetoed because of this provision. The Administration contends that tax penalties would not affect the Arab boycott but would hurt relations with Arab countries, harm United States companies and impair efforts for Middle East peace. [1:1.]

The House, by 394 to 0, and the Senate, by a voice vote, sent to President Ford a "sunshine" bill that would require some 50

Federal boards to conduct most of their business in public. Representative Bella S. Abrug of Manhattan had sponsored it in the House and Senator Lawton Childs, Democrat of Florida, in the Senate. Closed meetings could be held only under specified circumstances when matters such as defense and foreign policy were discussed. [1:5-6.]

Representative Wayne L. Hays, Democrat of Ohio, resigned his seat effective immediately, in letters to House Speaker Carl Albert and Gov. James A. Rhodes of Ohio. He failed to get a pledge of no further House action against him. [1:4.]

President Ford asked Attorney General Edward H. Levi for a quick report on allegations that the Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, Clarence M. Kelley, had improperly accepted gifts from subordinates. Mr. Levi said that a report that one Justice Department lawyer who had seen the information against Mr. Kelley had recommended his dismissal was inexact. [1:2-3.]

The Securities and Exchange Commission accused the accounting firm of Seidman & Seidman, formerly headed by L. William Seidman, now President Ford's economic coordinator, of negligence in auditing the books of the Equity Funding Corporation of America and three other companies. Mr. Seidman denied involvement. [1:2-3.]

Metropolitan

Accompanied by seven lawyers, Mayor Beame spent more than five hours with S.E.C. investigators to answer questions regarding allegations of fraud in city finances. Many experts say the investigation will produce recommendations for nationwide changes in municipal finance and may also give local politicians big problems. [1:5-6.]

The director and two officials of the Bureau of School Lunches were ordered suspended after a New York City Board of Education investigation found that purchase orders totaling $2 million had been split into small amounts, apparently to circumvent competitive bidding requirements. There were indications of overpayment of double or more in some paper purchases. [1:1.]

The state-owned Meadowlands race track in East Rutherford, N.J., opened with a harness-racing program. Located only six miles from midtown Manhattan, it is expected to challenge the previous New York parimutuel monopoly. [1:2-5.]

$34 Million Surplus for Connecticut

Connecticut ended the last fiscal year with a $34.7 million surplus, Comptroller J. Edward Caldwell reported. The Finance Commissioner, Jay Tepper, said it had not been decided how to use the surplus. Mr. Caldwell said in a report to Gov. Ella T. Grasso that it had been created by counting some tax revenues earlier than in the past, by economy measures taken by the Grasso administration and by inclusion of certain funds in the state's General Fund.

Police Official Backed in Long Beach

The Long Beach, L.I., City Council and city manager said they "firmly supported" William J. McKenney, the deputy police commissioner, who has been assailed by policemen's organizations, and said they would not remove him from the $25,000-a-year post. The removal of Mr. McKenney had been demanded by the Patrolmen's Benevolent Association and the Superior Officers Benevolent Association, who charged that he was unable to effectively administer the 75-member department. City officials said they could not find anything to substantiate the allegations.

Parking Violators Are Notified

The City Transportation Administrator, Alexander J. Mautner, said that delinquency notices had been mailed to 17,637 Pennsylvania residents who owe the city $2.4 million in unpaid parking fines and penalties. The Parking Violations Bureau reported that altogether some 62,000 Pennsylvania vehicles were listed on computer printouts of parking violations here. Unpaid tickets and penalties range as high as $20,240 on one vehicle.

From the Police Blotter:

One of three East Harlem youths who allegedly committed a series of rapes and robberies in the Columbia University area over the last two months was arrested after a rape victim saw him on upper Broadway and notified the police. The suspect, Tony Brown, 18 years old, of 1825 Madison Avenue, was also charged with sodomy and possessing a .22-caliber pistol after six other victims, most of them Columbia women students, identified him in a police lineup. Arnold Ricks, 17, of 1295 Fifth Avenue, and John Black, 20, of 55 East 119th Street, also were arrested but were booked only on the weapons charge. Two 23-year-old women were arrested on charges of robbing a 30-year-old rabbi at knife-point at Madison and Jefferson Streets, on the Lower East Side. They were identified as Marion Duffy of 182 South Street and Patricia Beers of Blairstown, N.J. They allegedly took $2 from the victim, who was identified only as Rabbi Mayer Nachman.

Hearing Convened in Newark On Charges Against Surgeon

NEWARK, Sept. 1—A hearing, fraud in the practice of medicine, professional incompetence and gross neglect that endangered the health or life of a patient at Christ Hospital in Jersey City. The patient was identified only by his initials, "J.E." In sum, the board said that Dr. Jascavevich had falsely represented that the patient had cancer.

Dr. Jascavevich voluntarily surrendered his license last May after the board lodged his charges against him. Mr. Goldman, after a hearing that is expected to last at least several days, will recommend to the board whether it should take any action against the surgeon, including suspension or revocation of his license. The board, headed by Dr. Edwin R. Albano, will make the final decision. Anthony LaBue, a deputy attorney general, is presenting the board's arguments before Mr. Goldman.

In Bergen County, no trial date has been set yet on the murder charges. Preliminary motions are expected to be heard later this month.

Police Pass Hat for Injured Mascot

About 90 Brooklyn traffic policemen have taken up a collection for Clarence, their mascot, whose sense of traffic is not nearly as good as his master's. The hapless brown and black mutt, described by Sgt. William Claxton as "part doberman and part something else," is recovering from being hit Tuesday by a police tow truck at Traffic Subdivision No. 2, which the dog has made his home since last winter.

It was the second accident in a week for Clarence, who was "brushed" by a car near the station house last Saturday. Clarence underwent surgery yesterday for a fractured pelvis. The surgery was performed at the Animal Hospital of Brooklyn, where he was taken with a motorcycle accident after the mishap. The veterinarian said he would pull through, but the officers will have to pick up the tab, which could be $500, according to Sergeant Claxton.

2 BUILDING LOCALS GET RACIAL QUOTA

U.S. Judge Says Minorities in the Operating Engineers Must Be 36% by '81

By ARNOLD H. LUBASCH Two construction union locals in New York City were ordered yesterday by a Federal judge to increase the number of blacks and Puerto Ricans in their membership from a current total of about 6 percent to 36 percent within five years.

The order, by Judge Charles H. Tenney in Federal District Court in Manhattan, was issued to Local 14 and 15 of the International Union of Operating Engineers, which control almost all jobs for workers who operate and maintain heavy machinery at construction sites throughout the city.

In addition to the 36 percent quota, which must be attained in five annual steps, the far-reaching order requires the locals to set up training programs for minority workers and to provide back pay for those who can prove that the locals discriminated against them.

Another major provision requires both locals to refer all workers for jobs from a single hiring hall, with all the jobs assigned to the workers in the order in which they signed the hiring lists.

Suit Filed by U.S. Judge Tenney's 33-page order resulted from a civil-rights suit that the Government had filed, charging racial discrimination in the two key locals, which include approximately 8,000 members in some of the highest-paid jobs in the construction industry.

Lawyers for the locals said they would not consent on any terms until union officials could study it and discuss it with their members.

Michael S. Devorkin, the Government lawyer in charge of the case, said Judge Tenney's order permanently prohibited the employers as well as the locals from engaging in discriminatory practices.

Mr. Devorkin noted that Local 14, including 14-B, contained about 1,500 members, with only 2.8 percent of them black or Puerto Rican, and that Local 15 contained about 6,400 members, with only 6.5 percent of them black or Puerto Rican.

In a decision last May, Judge Tenney ruled that the locals had discriminated by holding down their percentage of black and Spanish-surnamed men, who make up about 36 percent of the labor force from which the locals draw their members in the city.

The judge's order now requires the two locals to increase their percentage of minority members by gradual amounts each year until they reach 36 percent by Sept. 1, 1981.

Members of Local 14 usually earn more than $11 an hour operating large hoisting equipment, such as cranes and derricks, while Local 15 members earn about $10 an hour operating smaller equipment and doing maintenance work.

A wrong picture on a passport led yesterday to the arrest of a convict on parole and the recovery of most of the proceeds of a $48,000 midtown jewel burglary from a Saudi Arabian diplomats hotel room Tuesday.

The police said the picture was that of Robert Lee Hooks, 41 years old, of 1811 Park Avenue, who was convicted in 1974 of criminal possession of stolen property. He was arrested yesterday at a woman's apartment at 1365 Fifth Avenue in Harlem, where the police said they found $36,000 of the stolen jewels.

The police said that in questioning residents of the room of Lieut. Gen. Ali Hassan al-Shair, an military attaché, was robbed early Tuesday, a man showed them the passport, which had been taken from the hotel in a previous burglary and then returned to him after someone left it on an airline counter.

The police said they recognized the picture as Mr. Hooks. He was charged yesterday with possession of stolen property, possession of a forged instrument, criminal impersonation, grand larceny and possession of burglar's tools.

Voter Drive in Jersey Angers the G.O.P.

By RONALD SULLIVAN Special to The New York Times

First Use There of Frank by a Representative Called Wasteful

TRENTON, Sept. 1—Representative Frank Thompson Jr. of Monmouth County has used the Congressional franking privilege for the first time in New Jersey to promote a voter-registration drive.

The initial returns, calculated by Congressional officials here today, drew raves from the Democratic National Committee and cries of foul from Republican officials of President Ford's Presidential campaign in the state.

Mr. Thompson, who gained a national political reputation in 1960 when he succeeded in registering large numbers of new Democratic voters for John F. Kennedy, took advantage of New Jersey's 1974 election law, which permits prospective voters to register by mail or postcard.

Clerks Swamped After obtaining clearance from the Democratic-controlled Commission on Congressional Mailing Standards, the Congressional body that regulates the use of the frank, Mr. Thompson had his staff mail out postcard registration forms on the backs of letters urging his constituents to sign up to vote. The letters were sent to every household—about 140,000—in Mr. Thompson's Fourth Congressional District in the central part of the state. The results from the first three days of returns promise a registration bonanza, with a predictable 7-to-3 split that has traditionally favored Demo-

Other Republican Leaders Conceded that their Negative Reaction to the Thompson Drive was Primarily Based on their Fear that this and Others like it would result in vast new voter registrations that would tend to favor Jimmy Carter and the Democrats far more than they would Mr. Ford and other Republican candidates.

Mr. Carter, the Democratic Presidential candidate, has already announced that he regards the registration of new voters as a major goal of his campaign, and efforts toward that end have dominated the campaign strategy of the Democratic National Committee and state Democratic organizations throughout the country.

In some states, the budget for voter registration drives equals the funds earmarked for Mr. Carter's Presidential drive.

6 Witches and Channel 13 Auction Fan Turn Out for a 'Full-Moon Ceremony'

Michael Aaron, background center, taking part in a full-moon ceremony at "The Magical Child," of Herman Slater at 35 West 19th Street. The coven is from Passaic, N.J.

By JUDY KLEMESRUD Michael Aaron, a 28-year-old cosmetics company supervisor, donned a red robe yesterday, placed a dagger across his heart and took part in a "full-moon ceremony" with six witches from a coven in Passaic, N.J.

No, Mr. Aaron wasn't going to the devil or anything. He was just collecting on his "Tour of Occult New York" that he bought for $150 last May during a Channel 13 auction.

"Eee-o-vay, blessed be; eee-o-vay, blessed be," the pudgy bachelor chanted with the witches—three men and three women—as they clasped hands and danced around in a circle together. Then he sipped from a goblet of wine as it was passed around.

"Blessed be," he repeated, looking amused. Ritual Held in Shop The ritual, which was intended to draw the powers of the full moon into the witches (even though the next full moon isn't until next Wednesday) was held in front of an altar in the back room of the Magical Child, an occult shop run by a witch named Herman Slater at 35 West 19th Street.

It was the first stop on Mr. Aaron's all-day tour, which was planned and guided by Dan Greenburg, author of the semi-skeptical book "Something's There: My Adventures in the Occult" ($7.95, Doubleday). Mr. Aaron, a supervisor at the Revlon distribution center in Edison, N.J., said it was his first foray into the occult, although he had done some reading about it in religion courses in college. He didn't seem to take the day too seriously; in fact, the look on his face was one of skepticism mixed with perpetual bemusement.

"We're good witches," Sarna Svendsen of Passaic, the coven's high priestess, told him after the ceremony. "We love life. We don't sacrifice. There's no devil involved. To make black magic is totally against everything we believe in."

But Mr. Aaron was unimpressed, especially when told that it took about a year's study to become a witch and that not just anybody could join the Passaic coven. "It seems hypocritical to me," he said.

Then the psychic healer took over. He was Dean Kraft, an intense, mustachioed 26-year-old former rock musician from Brooklyn, and he asked Mr. Aaron whether there was anything physically wrong with him.

"Just a totally destroyed left ankle," Mr. Aaron replied evenly. "I tore all the ligaments and tendons at a company picnic."

Mr. Aaron smiled his bemused smile. "I'm going to Vegas Sunday," he said, "and I've had thoughts of quitting my job and going out on my own in New Jersey."

The tour also included a slide show of levitating furniture in haunted houses given by Ed and Lorraine Warren, psychic investigators from Monroe, Conn., and a Kirlian "aura" photograph of Mr. Aaron's fingerprints by Leslie Austin, a 26-year-old pop singer who said her psychic powers allowed her to find a parking place "9 times out of 10" in Manhattan.

Did Mr. Aaron feel his "Tour of Occult New York" was worth the $150 he had spent? He broke into his familiar smile. "Let's just say I'm still skeptical," he said.

55 Champions Are Produced by Kennel

By WALTER R. FLETCHER

On the shores of Lake Seneca, in upstate New York just south of Glenora, is Edenglen, known to fanciers as one of the top Newfoundland kennels in America.

"There have been Newfoundlanders here since my grandmother's days in the Nineties," said Willis Linn. He and his wife, Helena, occupy the estate that has been in the family since Dr. Fred Hovey Willis, a physician and a Unitarian minister, settled on the land in 1870.

"We started serious breeding 18 years ago," recalled Linn, "when we bought two puppy bitches—Dryad's Christine and Dryad's Nancy of Glenora. Helena showed both to their championships."

The two pups became the foundation for the kennel's breeding program, which has produced 55 champions. Edenglen Newfoundlanders are seen not only in this country but also on the continent, in the Philippines and Australia.

"Most of our breeding stock goes back to Chrissy," said Mrs. Linn. "She was the mother of our top-producing stud, Edenglen's Tucker, and of Ch. Edenglen's Banner, who twice took the national speciality. Three of her great-grandchildren have been best-in-show winners."

"One of Nancy's pups was Ch. Edenglen's Beau Geste, the sire of 25 champions, so you can see our original Newfoundlanders really have had a great effect on the breed."

The Newfoundland, a big, strong animal with massive head, is at home both in the water and on the land. The dog's average height is 28 inches, he weighs 150 pounds, has a water-resistant double coat and complete webbing between the toes. The webbing enables him to travel easily over marshes and he is a powerful swimmer.

"We never have campaigned our dogs extensively," said Linn. "We don't keep too many at Edenglen, so most of the top-winning Newfoundlanders whelped in our kennel have been owned by other fanciers."

Of 99 breeders in a Newfoundland Club of America listing, 56 had Edenglen pedigrees within the last three generations.

Linn now is lending his know-how to the judging end of the sport. For the last eight years, he has been ruling on Newfs; Old English sheepdogs, St. Bernards and Great Pyrenees. "To me judging is more enjoyment than work," said the retired Corning Glass executive.

Sweden's America's Cup Challenger Gets Christened

STENJONSUND, Sweden, Sept. 1 (AP)—Queen Silvia of Sweden, accompanied by her husband, King Carl XVI Gustaf, christened Sverige, the revolutionary computer-designed Swedish challenger for the America's Cup yacht racing series, during a ceremony at this west coast fishing village today.

The launching of the 63-foot aluminum vessel, jam-packed with advanced Swedish electronic systems, marked a most carefully coordinated joint effort by the Swedish industry. Spearheading the $1.3 million project is Pelle Petersson, one of Sweden's greatest sailors. Petersson, 42 years old, a former world champion, triple European and double Olympic medalist, directed the design and construction of the Swedish 17-meter yacht starting from scratch.

"The America's Cup has always been a dream for me, the climax of my sailing career," he said. "Today lots of boyhood dreams have been realized."

The ceremony marked one of Queen Silvia's first major public appearances since her June wedding. Petersson will take Sverige to the United States in June 1977. Two months later the qualification races get under way off Newport, R.I., against other challengers from Australia, Britain and France.

The winner meets the United States yacht in a four-of-seven-race series off Newport starting Sept. 13 along a 24.3-nautical mile, Olympic-type course.

Throughout the 106-year history of the America's Cup, no nation has wrested the coveted silver chalice from the New York Yacht Club. Many rich and famous men tried in the past, but failed.

But Robert Miral, commodore of the New York Y.C., commenting on the ambitious Swedish challenge recently, "We were scared, very concerned."

Holtz Wants Jets to Play Despite Pain

By GERALD ESKENAZI
HEMPSTEAD, L. I., Sept. 1
—When the Jets arrived at camp today they were greeted by still another written message from Coach Lou Holtz, who may become the Hallmark of the football mentors.

This was the printed sign next to the trainer's room: "The training room will be open at 9:30 A.M. If you can't practice you will be expected to be there at that time. Attendance will be taken."

It isn't funny to Holtz, who doesn't smile when he's questioned about demanding a perfectly straight line from his troops during the National Anthem, or about the way they sang the victory song he had composed.

"We'll just have to play with pain," he said, squaring the number of injuries his talent-rich club has already suffered. He is annoyed that many of his players bow to the pain and don't practice.

"Before coming into this league," he said, "I thought the players' reaction to pain and their attitude about it was superb."

Now, obviously, he doesn't believe that. He is concerned because the Pittsburgh Steelers will be the final preseason foe and he will start four rookies on defense. He wants to go into the regular campaign with the momentum of a victory. That is more a hope than an expectation.

"You've got to distinguish between pain and injury," said Holtz. "Pain is when you can't aggravate it any further by playing. I know we've got really hurt guys in Jerome Barkum, Clark Gaines, Reg Battle. Lots of others. But we're just missing too much time in practice. It makes it difficult to get consistency."

Like most coaches, Holtz hardly ever singles out players for criticism. But after mentioning that Steve Poole, a free agent linebacker, had a hip pointer, he said, "A hip pointer is just something that's painful."

When Ed Marinaro told him he was banged up after the Giants' game, Holtz said to him, "I thought you were supposed to be the guy who never misses a game."

And when Rich Caster hurt a toe severely yesterday, one that had been broken previously, Holtz said, "I know Caster's toe is painful. I know. I've played golf when I've been in pain."

Holtz is fond of repeating something a football coach told him when Holtz was 12 years old: "Your value to the football team is inversely proportionate to your distance from the ball."

Don Buckley, the rookie wide receiver, played for Holtz at North Carolina State. He is on the sidelines after landing on his tailbone following a circus catch last week against Washington.

"Coach Holtz is doing the same thing here he did in college," said Buckley. "He expects the players to be honest with themselves and him about what's wrong with them. He likes to say, 'This program is based on total honesty.'"

Walt Michaels is not only the New York Jets' linebacker coach and defensive coordinator. He is also the first man picked in the mythical game called, "Who would you want on your side in an alley fight?"

"I played with this broken hand," he said, holding out his left hand. "In them days—maybe I shouldn't say this—they gave you needles. The doc said to me, 'You'll never play the piano any more.'" But Michaels missed only two games in 11 years. "I missed one in '52 and one in '59," he said.

"I suppose you can play with pain up to a certain threshold," said Caster. "You certainly don't want to play with pain if it affects the way you move. But I can see playing with some."

In Michaels's world, which started in coal mines and farming, if you didn't think about it, it didn't bother you. "I have no pain in my hand now," he said.

N.F.L. Sets Player Limit at 43

National Football League owners, except Seattle and Tampa Bay, will each be limited to 43 players this season, Commissioner Pete Rozelle said last night.

The expansion teams—the Seattle Seahawks and Tampa Bay Buccaneers—will be allowed to carry six additional players for the first two games, then 43 after that. However, the two teams may dress only 43 players for any game.

Rozelle said the teams must reach the player limit by 2 P.M. Monday.

owners extended the inter-conference trading deadline to 4 P.M., Wednesday. The intraconference trade deadline is Oct. 19, the Tuesday following the sixth week of the regular season.

Rozelle said the owners did not discuss the tabling of a proposed contract by player representatives at a Chicago meeting Tuesday night, nor the approval by a judge to allow the state of Delaware to conduct a lottery on the outcome of N.F.L. games.

"I was disappointed," the commissioner said of the action by the Players Association.

Alexander Is Great as a Yankee

streak, the right-hander, who will be 26 years old Saturday, has pitched two complete games and two that were each one out shy of being complete. Put those together with his earlier string of four near no-hitters and they add up to a generally impressive performance since the Yankees acquired him from Baltimore June 15. It's the best pitching he has done in his six-year major league career.

| TUESDAY NIGHT |        | YANKEES (A) |        | OAKLAND (A) |        |

| Total         | 32 292 | Total       | 32 292 | Total       | 32 292 |

Various people pointed to different reasons for his success—addition of a good change-up to his pitching repertory, better control, for example—but Don Baylor provided the interesting explanation.

"The difference is he's playing with the Yankees," said Baylor, the A's outfielder who played with Alexander for four years in Baltimore. "Earl Weaver is the type of manager who was putting pressure on him all the time about throwing strikes. If you're young, playing for Earl is tough. Earl never had any confidence in him. Billy Martin apparently does. Now Doyle is just going out and pitching."

pearing in 29 games and batting .178. He plays both the infield and outfield.

Tovar, who will be joining his fifth team, has a career batting average of .279 for 12 seasons in the majors. He previously played for Billy Martin, the Yankees' manager, at Minnesota and Texas.

Alexander had two primary complaints when he was an Oriole: he didn't start often enough and Weaver acted too quickly in taking him out of games, the sin that Martin apparently committed, too.

"If I got in trouble early, he would take me out," Alexander said of Weaver.

"That's what I'm fighting now. If I have a bad inning early, it doesn't mean I'm going to have a bad game and should be taken out. You can have a bad inning and still pitch a good game. Look at the game in Kansas City and this one."

gether two infield singles and two consecutive walks for a run in the first inning, but with a 2-0 count, Phil Garner hit a fly to center for the last out. The A's didn't score again.

"When he makes them hit the ball, that's when he's successful," Martin explained.

"When he starts walking them, that's when he gets into trouble. He's got to make the rest of the team help him. You also have to stay on top of him. When he gets to around 130 pitches, you have to be careful."

Alexander threw 114 pitches in beating the A's and didn't need help from Sparky Lyle and Dick Tidrow, who were warming up in the bullpen throughout the ninth inning.

Nettles hit his home run off Stan Bahnsen after Carlos May led off the seventh with a double. The homer was Nettles' 23d, his most as a Yankee (28 is his career high), and the team's 100th of the season. That marked the 50th time the Yankees have reached the 100 homer plateau, a feat no other team has accomplished.

Yankees Sign Tovar
The Yankees announced in New York Wednesday the signing of Cesar Tovar, a 36-year-old native of Venezuela, who was released recently by Oakland, after ap-

The second game of the 1976 World Series will be played at night on Sunday, Oct. 17, as a one-year experiment, Commissioner Bowie Kuhn announced yesterday. The decision to shift the game time was made to allow more fans to watch and listen to the game, a statement from the commissioner's office said.

Why is Tennis magazine first choice of readers and advertisers among all tennis publications?

Just look at what it covers.

Service: with money-saving, game-improving features.

Which shoe is right for you? Here are valuable tips for shoe-shopping, plus a detailed fact-and-price chart on more than 100 models costing $10 to $39.

Instruction: to help you play tennis better and enjoy it more.

- The popular Instruction Portfolio uses sequence photos, large drawings and clear explanatory type to show the average player how to develop that supreme weapon...the topspin lob.
- A former Davis Cup player with a Ph.D. in psychology tells how to psych your opponent into melting under pressure.

Topical events: with helpful, authoritative reports.

Personalities: profiled in depth by the game's top writers.

Evonne Goolagong has matured professionally and personally in the past year and may be ready for superstardom. Why the change? Writer Peter Bodo credits her marriage to a young Englishman.

The September issue—with its crowd-pleasing editorial mix—shows once again why Tennis magazine is first in paid circulation and advertising among all tennis publications. Here's a closer look at the...

Special U.S. Open Section

■ A manual for TV viewers and spectators tells you all about the greatest show in U.S. tennis—the complete 12-day competition and TV schedule, how to get tickets, ways to get to Forest Hills and a helpful manual for spectators and TV viewers.

■ An enterprising writer takes you inside the most famous American tennis club for a member's-eye view. Who belongs to the West Side Tennis Club? How do you become a member? What are the benefits? Why, considering the uncrowded courts and handsome setting, are dues so low?

■ Meet the "raggedy nobodies of Forest Hills"—that horde of youthful autograph hunters who outsmart the guards and besiege the stars. A humorous account on these colorful urchins and how they rank the players.

■ Plus a look at the stars of tomorrow competing at Forest Hills...how players qualify for the U.S. Open...and a computer ranking of top players.

And 15 Pages of Helpful Instruction

Besides the two cover articles, other instructional features include the second in the series on winning doubles: "Keys to a Better Return of Serve," which contributing editor Bob Harman calls the game's second most important shot...and six simple drills designed to make your practice sessions worthwhile.

What's in Tennis for Advertisers?

A hospitable editorial climate that helped make Tennis one of America's fastest-growing magazines. In January, its circulation rate base goes to 360,000, a five-fold increase in five years.

This growing audience of active participants has attracted a growing number of advertisers of resorts, travel, autos, apparel, toiletries, liquor and other products aimed at young, upper-income households. For the first nine months, advertising pages are up 37 percent over last year.

But do the Yankees and the

As Governor Byrne said,
that's just the beginning.
Next year, the Meadowlands

Darkness tends to hide the starkness of the new track treeless landscape suggests a shopping-center motif, with lots of telephone poles and light towers and not much greenery, except at the peri-champion, Dick Siderowf, beat the son of an old friend today and advanced to the third round of the United States Amateur golf cham-

The victim of the 2-and-1

Julius Boros Jr., whose father won the United States Open twice.
"It was sort of difficult for me to play young Julius because I've known him and his family so well," Siderowf said, after shooting a 40 on the first nine on the Bel-Air course for a 1-up lead, seeing it vanish on the 12th and then winning both the 16th

Fred Ridley, the defender.

Winner Prepared For His Big Match

Six days before Billy Martin came to Forest Hills, he knew he would be coming to play Harold Solomon in the first round of the United States Open tennis tournament.

Five days before the match, Martin began practicing for Solomon at the Port Washington (L.I.) Tennis Academy, running down soft lob and hard, two-fisted backhands, adjusting physically and mentally to the relentless pressures that Solomon puts on an opponent.

Solomon is called "The Human Backboard" because he never gets tired of returning the ball. Martin had to be in top shape to beat him. He prepared for that.

Four days before the match, Martin began studying following the newspaper reports of Solomon's progress at the United States Pro tournament in Brookline, Mass.

Three days before, Martin reached the final at Brookline. Martin was happy about that—really, really happy.

"I was hoping he'd get to the final," Martin said. "I hoped he'd have a five-set match in the final. Because maybe then he wouldn't be ready for a tough match here."

Two days before, Martin watched the final on television from the living room of his home in Sands Point, L.I., where he was staying. He watched Solomon go four long sets with Bjorn Borg.

"I kept looking at my watch and seeing how long he was out there," Martin said. "I was watching with my father and my coach, and we were all saying that it would help us very much."

One day before the match, Martin thought he was ready, despite Solomon's No. 10 seeding and his legendary proficiency on clay.

"Clay is my best surface, too," Martin said. "I've been playing good lately, feeling stronger. I had seen Harold play that four-setter the night before. We were going to be on center court, and I thought the crowd might be for me because Americans are usually for the underdog, and I was the underdog."

And yesterday things just sort of fell into place. Martin, who is 19 years old, comes from California and is ranked 18th in the country, went out and scored his biggest victory, 7-5, 6-4.

He had had some nice victories before—junior winner at Forest Hills and Wimbledon; National Collegistic champion last year as a freshman at the University of California, Los Angeles, and a decision over Ken Rosewell once, Vijay Amitraj once and Ross Case once.

marathon with Ray Moore of South Africa. The 24-year-old Fikak, who had had a productive summer, fought off one match point, at 5-6 in the second set and another at 6-7 in a second-set tiebreaker (which he won 9-7). But Moore, a seasoned competitor, ran off the last five games of the final set and won, 7-5, 6-7, 6-2.

The big guns had their share of problems, to the delight of spectators who wandered around the walkways, which had been widened; crammed under fences for peeks of field-court activity and satisfied their thirsts at the 14 new water fountains added this year.

Canada Beats U.S. For Stevens Cup

Top-seeded Jimmy Connors traded 13 service breaks with Bob Hewitt, the bankrupted Australian, who says he is early problem as Solomon rushed to a 5-2 lead. But the former National Collegiate champion saved two set points with Solomon serving at 5-3. Martin saved two more on his serve from 15-40 in the next game en route to winning the last five games of the set.

An errant Solomon overhead gave Martin the break for 4-3 in the second set. He won the match by luring Solomon to the net with a forehand drop shot, then driving a forehand deep to Solomon's two-handed backhand.

Martin raised his arms in triumph and leaped over the net, elated after a summer that had included close three-set losses to Ramirez, Fikak and Dickie Stockton. Another mild surprise was the 7-6, 7-5 victory by Steve Krulvitz of Baltimore over Balazs Taroczy of Hungary. Taroczy had a 5-3 lead in each set.

Vijay Amitraj of India was beaten by Kim Warwick, a 24-year-old Australian, 6-4, 6-4. Another Australian, Ross Case, escaped a match point serving at 4-5 in the final set against Zan Guerry, once an excellent clay player. But Case pulled out the match, 2-6, 6-3, 7-5.

Seventh-seeded Arthur Ashe has a set point at 5-6, 30-40 against John James of Australia on a field court before salvaging the match, 7-6, 6-3. Saying "I'm too old to adapt myself to clay," the 33-year-old Ashe saw Connors, Borg, Guillermo Vilas or Ilie Nastase as the eventual singles champion.

Eighth-seeded Raul Ramirez lost tricky wind currents and Patrick Proisy's passin shots unnerve him in the early going. The stylish Frenchman served for the first set at 5-4 in the grandstand, but Ramirez broke him at love, won a tiebreak, 7-3, and then marched through the second set at love.

The evening program, before a crowd of 4,312, was cut short when Onny Parun of New Zealand defaulted to the fifth-seeded Nastase. Parun suffered back pains in the opening game.

The default followed a noneventful 7-5, 6-1 victory by Manuel Orantes of Spain, the defending champion, over Jun Kuki of Japan. Besides having had trouble "getting motivated" for his match, Solomon shrugged his normal baseline retrieving game for more aggressive tactics.

"He was trying to come to the net, which he usually doesn't do," Martin said. "I sort of felt he was tired mentally, not physically."

Continued From Page 1, Col. 3 the Federal Government into local government affairs; but he had promised that he would be available to testify while the matter was being resolved. Although municipal securities are exempted from S.E.C. requirements on disclosure and registration, the commission maintains it has general authority to investigate possible fraud in the sale or trading of all securities. Section 10(b) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, for instance, makes it unlawful to employ "any manipulative or deceptive device or contrivance" in the sale of "any security registered on a national securities exchange or any security not so registered."

The fact that city securities are not registered, however, leaves it unclear whether the city might have failed to insure proper disclosure of its finances, according to securities experts. Nonetheless, politicians agreed that there could be profound political consequences for Mr. Beame or Mr. Goldin, both of whom are expected to seek re-election next year, should the S.E.C. issue a report declaring that either or both of them failed to make proper disclosure.

Many securities experts also predict that the S.E.C. will, at the very least, make recommendations for new controls on municipal finances to insure that the New York City situation never repeats itself. Although the S.E.C. is reportedly investigating accounting practices that have gone back a decade or more, knowledgeable officials said the investigators were focusing on events surrounding the following sales: $400 million on Dec. 13; $820 million, Jan. 13; $290 million, Feb. 14, and $491 million March 14.

The March 14 issue was the last note sale before the city became so engulfed by its financial emergency that it was barred entirely from the credit markets. Payment of the principal on the notes involved was suspended last December by a moratorium imposed by the State Legislature.

At the time of the sale of these notes, Mr. Goldin and Mr. Beame were engaged in a feud over the size of the 1974-75 budget deficit, with the Mayor projecting it at $480 million and Mr. Goldin insisting it was $650 million.

The actual size of the deficit was never determined. Months later, the Municipal Assistance Corporation found the city had an accumulated deficit over the previous several years of $2.7 billion, which it said had been "hidden" by an array of questionable accounting devices.

These devices are said to be a main subject of the S.E.C. inquiry. The S.E.C. has subpoenaed some 200,000 pages of material from the Comptroller's office, officials said, and taken testimony from virtually all of Mr. Goldin's top aides. Both Melvin N. Lechner, the former Budget Director, and James A. Cavanaugh, the former First Deputy Mayor, have also testified.

One former city official heavily involved in its finances has not testified. Edward K. Hamilton, a former Deputy Mayor and Budget Director, said this week that he had not been approached by the commission. Former Mayor John V. Lindsay has been out of the country recently and unavailable for comment.

With reference to the writers, the S.E.C. is investigating whether financial institutions paid to make this information available to those who chased city notes. It is a part to be tried to determine whether banks warily follow city notes out of the portfolios at the time the offering, that, if it were minored as true, might in the banks knew more the state of city finances as

According to securities experts, the question is whether these official reports contain sufficient disclosure to permit a practice of siphoning money from year to year into the coming year's receipts, a practice known as the "accrual of notes."

In some cases, the practices were sanctioned by the Legislature. Internal memoranda of City Comptroller's office June 1975—also subpoenaed the S.E.C.—states that city's accounting practices could be used to spend without or otherwise generating revenue, finance of surplus operating cash with short-and long-term and obscure the above undecipherable financial means.

Mayor Beame arriving at 26 Federal Plaza to appear before investigators of the Securities and Exchange Commission. With him is a lawyer, James Greilshemer.

But the school board's investigation found that during the period examined—from October 1974, to March 1976—a total of 54 large orders, each in excess of $5,000 and with a combined value of $2.2 million, were split into 728 "open-market" orders. Each open-market order came to less than $5,000 and thus was not subject to the usual competitive bidding required of larger orders.

Two of the bureau officials—Julius Jacobs, the $35,000-a-year director, and William Scully, a $25,700-a-year assistant director—were ordered suspended with pay on charges that they failed to provide adequate supervision. They will probably be given other assignments while awaiting disposition of the charges brought by Mr. Anker.

A third employee, Walter R. Moir, was suspended without pay from his $17,000-a-year position of administrative associate. Mr. Moir, who allegedly split the bills, was accused of neglect of duty, unbecoming conduct and incompetent and inefficient service.

The only one of the three who could be reached yesterday was Mr. Jacobs, who said he "would welcome a full and complete investigation." He also expressed confidence that he would eventually be cleared of the charge.

"My only concern right now," he said, "is what this will do to the school lunch program and to the 560,000 kids who will depend on it when the new term begins soon."

Copies of the charges against Mr. Moir were mailed to his home Tuesday. "I am shocked," Chancellor Anker said, "not so much by the possibility of some corruption, but by the total inadequacy of the business procedures for policing and avoiding such a situation."

He added that some changes had already been made in the bureau's operations to prevent any repetition of such a situation, and that other reforms would be made soon.

All of the purchase orders, according to a confidential Board of Education report, involved one company—Bonded Products of 1080 Leggett Avenue, the Bronx. The company was not specifically accused in the report of having done anything improper, although the report asserted that the prices paid to Bonded for paper goods were far higher than the prices charged by other vendors.

Prices Defended According to the report on the investigation, which was headed by James W. Randolph, the board's inspector general, the school system paid—by way of illustration—$22.87 for a supply of paper plates purchased from Bonded, whereas it could have obtained the same quantity for $12.97 from another vendor. Five-ounce cold cups cost $35 for 2,500, when purchased from Bonded, but could have been obtained for $15.10 from another company.

An executive of Bonded, the report said, defended the prices to be especially problematic for the S.E.C. because under the information regarding city's accounting practices always been a matter of record. A year ago, for example, an interim report by office of Arthur Levitt, State Comptroller, found that the city had been borrowing anticipation of receiving estate taxes that it knew would never receive.

Although this report was regarded by some as a disclosure of something new, other officials' reports of the Comptroller did show over the years there were constant short receipts of real estate for various reasons, though the city had been in anticipation of receiving full amount.

According to securities experts, the question is whether these official reports contain sufficient disclosure to permit a practice of siphoning money from year to year into the coming year's receipts, a practice known as the "accrual of notes."

In some cases, the practices were sanctioned by the Legislature. Internal memoranda of City Comptroller's office June 1975—also subpoenaed the S.E.C.—states that city's accounting practices could be used to spend without or otherwise generating revenue, finance of surplus operating cash with short-and long-term and obscure the above undecipherable financial means.

School Chancellor Irving Anker, who ordered the suspensions, said that the school system was turning over its findings to the City Commissioner of Education at the time, but would, at the same time, press its own inquiry into the administration of the $117-million-a-year school lunch operation. Another inquiry, which involves a total audit of the bureau, is also being made by the office of City Comptroller Harold J. Goldin. It was Mr. Goldin's office that first spotted the apparent improprieties last spring and called the Board of Education's attention to them. At that time, however, it was reported that the total amount of the split bills was $200,000. The Comptroller's office, which also felt that the bill's were too high, paid the company $105,000.

6 Retired Police Officers Hired As Public School Consultants

The Board of Education has hired six former police officers, five of whom are receiving retirement pensions, as $75-a-day consultants for the board's school security program, contravening a City Charter provision on employment of pensioners.

The hirings required special approval by the city's Civil Service Commission because the City Charter prohibits the hiring of pensioners by government agencies if the resulting salary and pension benefits exceed $1,800 a year.

As consultants, the retired police officers are expected to earn annual incomes of $15,000 for 40 weeks of training of security guards. All but one are now receiving pensions of up to $10,000 a year, according to board officials.

To contravene the Charter, the three-member Civil Service Commission acted under the amended Section 211 of the State's Retirement and Social Security Law, according to Alphonse D'Ambrose, the commission chairman. That section permits the hiring of retirees as consultants in an agency can demonstrate a need for the consultants and if there are no other qualified individuals available to perform the job.

The former police officers were identified by a board spokesman as Louis Amoroso and Henry Murphy, former police lieutenants; Henry Brancha, a retired sergeant, and Albert Berger, Robert Powell and Nicholas Vecchio, former detectives. All but Mr. Berger are receiving police pensions. Mr. Berger, upon retirement, chose to receive his pension at a future date.

It was not made clear by officials yesterday just how these six men were chosen as consultants or what their special qualifications were for the job. Carlton Irish, the director of the board's Office of School Safety, said the former police officers were needed for their experience and ability to train school guards, whose ranks were diminished by more than 1,000 men last year because of the city's financial crisis and subsequent budget cuts.

Ground Bone Meat Sale Blocked by Federal Judge

WASHINGTON, Sept. 1 (UPI)—Federal District Judge William Bryant temporarily struck down today a controversial Agricultural Department regulation that regulates use by meat processors of "mechanically deboned meat," including ground-up bone in hot dogs and other foods.

Judge Bryant, ruling on a suit brought by six consumer organizations, Representative Margaret Heckler, Republican of Massachusetts, and Maryland attorney general Francis Burch, granted a temporary restraining order against the temporary regulation, which was issued last April 27.

The order will remain in effect pending the outcome of a scheduled hearing on Sept. 2, whether to convert it into a temporary injunction, court spokesmen said.

Chemical Blast Hurt Nuclear Plant Worker

RICHLAND, Wash., Sept. 1 (AP)—A worker contaminated with radiation in a chemical explosion at the Hanford Nuclear Reservation has problems with his vision, nitric acid burns on his skin and possible internal radiation contamination, his doctor said today.

Dr. Bruce Breitenstein said Harold McCuskey, 64 years old, received a radiation dose "well over the amount he would have had. The problem is you can't get a very good fix on this in the first few days. All you can say is, it's excessive."

A second worker being treated at a separate decontamination facility, Marvin E. Klundt, 43, was exposed to less radiation than Mr. McCuskey, officials here said. However, as with Mr. McCuskey, it is not known exactly how much radiation Mr. Klundt absorbed.

Scientists Drilling In Floor of Atlantic Ocean

WOODS HOLE, Mass. (AP)—Scientists from United States Geological Survey are drilling in the Atlantic Ocean floor for fresh water. "Among other things, we may have existing inland ocean beds since the Pleistocene, which ended 25,000 years ago," said John C. Harte, the leader of a 40-member scientific team aboard the ship Glomar Challenger.

The 400-foot ship has been drilling along the Atlantic Coast all summer, gradually moving northward from Georgia as it conducts a $2.7 million study of the continental shelf. "We have long suspected fresh water beds exist beneath the continental shelf," said Mr. Harte. "If aquifers are in the area, they are in the area."

The findings of the study, which are being made public, will be made public. The project ends on Sept. 20.

Gaining Tax Deduction For an Office at Home

The Internal Revenue Service long contended that a taxpayer who tries to claim a deduction for an office at home will have a difficult time unless he is either self-employed or responding to a specific condition of employment. Enough court decisions have now come down on the side of the Service so that it is almost a waste of time to litigate unless the taxpayer's case fits the "strict" standards set by the Service.

However, if Congress repeals the law that requires a taxpayer to have an office at home, the IRS position will be nullified. The IRS has appeared to have changed its position in recent years. The United States Tax Court in a landmark decision ruled that Stephen A. Auer, a Revenue Service lawyer, was entitled to deduct the expense of an office at home, even though it was not a condition of employment, because it was "in" his home.

One year, however, a Federal appeals court in Richmond, Va., reversed that decision, upholding the IRS long-standing position. There are other recent cases being litigated in the Revenue Service.

The Tax Court ruled that A. Sharon, an I.R.S. lawyer whose business was available to him in his home, could not deduct the expense of an office at home because it was not a condition of employment, comfort, or convenience.

The Tax Court, citing the Auer decision, ruled that Lee Meenan, an instructor at Pennsylvania State University, was not entitled to deduct the cost of his office at home because it was not a condition of employment, and that his campus office was noisy, crowded and unlighted.

Federal appeals court in San Francisco ruled that a taxpayer was mistaken in claiming a deduction for an office at home. The court said that a school teacher could not deduct the expense of his office at home because it was not a condition of employment, and that he used the space for two hours of his work, and worked eight hours in the space was actually used.

The appeals court thus said the IRS formula for deducting the expense of an office at home is correct. The IRS said in a six-page ruling issued in 1962 (Rev. Ruling 62-180), employees qualify if, as a condition of employment, they must provide their own space and regularly use a portion of their home for business.

The ruling specifically excluded "the voluntary, occasional or incidental use" of a home office.

An I.R.S. spokesman said that taxpayers who work at one job and do other work "on the side" at home—such as free-lance writers, part-time salesmen and telephone solicitors—would also be entitled to deduct office expenses for that part-time work.

"If you're in business for yourself," he said, "there's no problem, if the place of business is a part of your home." The amount of the deduction, he noted, may be disputed. He mentioned accountants, insurance agents and doctors, dentists and other professionals as taxpayers who could make such deductions for offices at home.

Generally, maintenance and depreciation of the home are the basic deductions allowed by the I.R.S. The allocation of space for office use is based on a ratio of the office area to the total area of the house. (If, say, the office is 150 square feet and the home 2,000 square feet, the ratio used is 150/2000, or 7 1/2 percent of the home's total expense cost.)

Prentice-Hall, Inc., the tax service, suggests that there is still room for the taxpayer to maneuver. "The I.R.S. will probably disallow on audit all home-office deductions that don't fall squarely within Rev. Ruling 62-180," it said, "but if you're willing to try, start off by only deducting rooms solely used for business. And only deduct home-office expenses when your office at work isn't available after hours. Those with the best chances for success are those who can't possibly complete all their work at the office and must work at home."

The I.R.S. said that photocopies of its revenue ruling could be obtained by writing or visiting local Revenue Service offices. It should be requested by number (Rev. Rul. 62-180).

Johns-Manville Plans to Lift Asbestos Prices 14% Jan. 1
The Johns-Manville Corporation said yesterday that it planned to increase its price on all grades of asbestos fiber by 14 percent effective Jan. 1. In other price actions Uniroyal Inc. raised price on ABS powders 7 percent to 9 percent.

The Kaiser Steel Corporation said it was withdrawing its steel following similar actions by other producers.

SEIDMAN CONCERN ACCUSED BY S.E.C.

view today that he did not participate in the lengthy discussions leading to the agreement with the S.E.C.

The White House had no formal comment on the matter. The commission's allegation was that although the cases involved deception on the part of Seidman & Seidman's clients, the firm's conduct, nevertheless, "represented a breach of its ethical and professional responsibilities."

The S.E.C. declared that audits were not conducted in accordance with generally accepted accounting procedures that, in several instances, it failed to obtain adequate documentation for its opinions. Seidman & Seidman also permitted critical areas to be examined by inadequately trained people and placed "unwarranted reliance on management representations," the S.E.C. held. But it was made clear that there was no evidence showing Seidman & Seidman was ever party to any of the fraud.

Today's agreement, in which the firm did not admit or deny the S.E.C.'s allegations, prohibits Seidman & Seidman from taking on any new publicly held companies as clients for about six months. It also establishes a committee to conduct a general study of the firm's auditing procedures, and it gives the commission a veto over any mergers by the firm during this examination period.

The agreement is similar to one negotiated with Peat, Marwick, Mitchell & Company, last year. No other actions of equal severity have been taken by the S.E.C. against other accounting firms.

The severity of these two settlements underscores the commission's deepening concern about the mechanism it relies on to provide investors with accurate information about corporations. Its principal legislative goal in dealing with the corporate bribery scandals, for example, has been to stiffen the penalties for improper behavior by accountants, lawyers and managements responsible for adequate disclosure.

The three companies against which the commission moved today for allegedly misleading Seidman & Seidman were Cenco Inc., a medium-sized medical equipment company that was a Seidman & Seidman client for a long time; Sa Com, an electronics company now bankrupt, and Omni-Rx Health Systems. The S.E.C. also named Seidman & Seidman as an officer of all three companies.

Seidman & Seidman issued a statement saying that, although it did not agree with many of the views expressed by the commission, it consented to the settlement because "we believe it prudent to end litigation with the S.E.C., with whom we are doing business daily on behalf of our clients."

Farm Workers on Coast Battling Castle & Cooke

The U.F.W. defeated the Teamsters, 136 to 39, with 9 "no union" votes cast, on Sept. 8. The state certified the U.F.W. as the bargaining representative of the workers on Dec. 1.

Negotiators for the union and the company held 26 meetings, but no agreement was reached on a number of basic issues, according to both sides. Laborers at West Foods earn from $2.50 to $2.95 an hour, according to George Horne, Castle & Cooke's chief negotiator. He added that the rates (which vary, depending on how long the laborers have worked at West) would have increased to a range of $2.75 to $3.20 in April under the old contract with the Teamsters.

Under California Law, if a contract is not signed within one year after a union has been certified as a bargaining agent, another election must be held. Mr. Schneider said the company "stands ready to negotiate." But Gilbert Tadija, a union negotiator, said it had become "clear that the company was interested in running out the clock on the one-year certification period." No further talks are scheduled.

The exact period for which Seidman & Seidman is barred from taking on or negotiating for new business is not contained in the agreement, but the period is to end Dec. 15, the spokesman for the firm said. The so-called peer review will be conducted at the firm's expense by a committee of seven accountants from separate firms and one lawyer. The spokesman declined to identify any of the committee members.

Seidman & Seidman ranks among the top 15 American accounting firms and maintains 43 offices throughout the country. Mr. Lee said in his statement that in more than 60 years of practice the firm had never before been the subject of an S.E.C. inquiry.

"a classic case of management fraud," one that was portrayed by the S.E.C. as a scheme to conceal falsification of inventories, among other things, from the accountants.

Bernard Z. Lee, Seidman & Seidman's managing partner, said that 25 of the firm's mergers since 1968 had been highly successful but that "in Wolfson & Weiner we were dealing with a man who was later to be convicted for his role in Equity Funding, and the Wolfson & Weiner firm was named an unindicted co-conspirator."

Mr. Lee added, "It's now clear that we were deliberately deceived by these people in order to induce us to merge with them."

OLYMPIA BREWING PLANS A MERGER

Proposes a Stock Exchange With Lone Star Brewing

By CLARE M. RECKERT
The Olympia Brewing Company, the nation's seventh largest brewer, and the Lone Star Brewing Company, a regional brewer in Texas, announced yesterday merger plans in an exchange of stock valued at about $75 million.

Under the agreement, Lone Star would exchange 3.75 common shares for each share of Olympia common stock. Olympia, which was actively traded in the over-the-counter market yesterday at 38, has 2,117,352 shares outstanding. Lone Star has 1,870,015 shares outstanding.

Olympia, with breweries at Tumwater, Wash., and St. Paul, markets Olympia and Hamm's beer brands in 25 states from the Pacific to the Midwest. Lone Star, based in San Antonio, distributes the bulk of its beer in Texas and ranks 17th among the country's brewers. A subsidiary engages in full service truck leasing and truck manufacturing. Sales last year totaled $46.7 million and net income was $2 million, or $1.08 a share. Olympia earned $2.5 million, or $1.33 a share, on revenues of $260.9 million.

The agreement is subject to approval by the boards and shareholders of both companies. The proposed merger was announced by Robert A. Schmidt, chairman of Olympia Brewing, and Harry D. Jersig, chairman of Lone Star Brewing. Mr. Jersig, 74, a founder and major stockholder of the Texas company, said he planned to retire after the merger.

Olympia Exploration Sells Aegean Interest
The Oceanic Exploration Company announced that it had sold a 68.75 percent interest in oil and gas licenses in the northern Aegean Sea, to Denison Mines. Oceanic received $15 million cash, a $10 million loan and a sum of oil payments to come out of the first production of the licenses, which cover 420,256 acres offshore and include the Prino oil field. Oceanic will also receive a profit interest of 15 percent of all future production from the licenses.

Certain-Teed Agrees To Antitrust Settlement
The Certain-Teed Corporation said it had entered into an agreement with the Department of Justice to settle an antitrust action against its March 1973 acquisition of a fiberglass insulation plant in Shelbyville, Ind., from PPG Industries Inc.

The agreement provides for the appointment of a trustee who would have the authority during 15 months to attempt to sell the plant, subject to the approval of the Court. If the plant is not sold in the 15-month period, the company may apply to the Justice Department for further direction. If the sale appears impossible, such direction may permit Certain-Teed to retain the plant.

to accept them at all, despite the premium given to Canadian currency over American money in the international market.

Mr. Bennett said the Ontario Government would try to bring price gougers into line by various means, such as refusing to list their operations in the official publications handed out to visitors.

"Some Action" Necessary
"If the majority in a given area wishes to cooperate and put their prices at a realistic level, then we have to take some action with those that don't cooperate," he added.

Among the pronounced price differentials between Canada and nearby areas of the United States in services for tourists, an Ontario official cited an international investor group to acquire it company for about $25.6 million cash. The Los Angeles maker of metal parts, aircraft refueling systems and met furniture said that this was amount to about $5 a share on the basis of 5,129,502 shares of common stock currently outstanding.

George R. Roberts, a director of A.I.L., is a partner in Kohlberg, Kravis, Roberts & Company, the merchant bank group making the offer. T preliminary proposal is conditioned on raising the necessary financing, largely from institutional sources, and on a definitive agreement. It is also subject to approval of directors and stockholders of A.I.L.

chain that charged $35 a night for a double room in its Ottawa hotel, compare with $25 at a sister hotel in Syracuse.

A comparison published recently in The Ottawa Citizen of prices in food stores belonging to the same chain in Ottawa and Watertown N.Y., showed that a quart of milk costing 57 cents in Ottawa was 41 cents in Watertown. An identical snack of fish and chips with a cup of coffee, purchased at the outlets of the same fast-food franchise in the two cities costs $2.25 in Ottawa and $1.45 in Watertown.

Travelers on a budget who find out about these differences tend to stay south of the border for their vacations, an official said. The United States Bicentennial celebration and the election campaign this year are believed to be other factors keeping Americans away from Canada.

CHASE TRUST DEFICIT CUT IN FISCAL YEAR

The Chase Manhattan Mortgage and Realty Trust, the real estate investment trust whose 1975 deficit exceeded $186 million, cut its losses substantially in the fiscal year ended last May 31, according to its annual report yesterday.

The net loss came to $14.6 million after including an extraordinary gain of $15.3 million from the exchange of certain assets for debt with its creditor banks. Before this gain the operating loss was $29.9 million and gross revenues were $32.7 million.

The trust's fourth-quarter operating loss was $18.3 million before the extraordinary gain of $15.3 million from exchange of assets for debt, and after this the net loss was $3.6 million. The operating loss reflects an additional provision for possible losses of $18.4 million, the report said. No comparative figure for the final quarter last year is available.

Mexican Bankers and Businessmen Call Peso Move Courageous

The New York Times
CITY, Sept. 1.—The government's decision to devalue the peso was greeted by businessmen and bankers as a courageous move that might provoke a wave of inflation but should strengthen the economy.

But while the timing of the measure was totally unexpected and successfully averted any serious new run on the peso, the decision to devalue or float the currency against the United States dollar for the first time since 1954 increasingly looked like a de facto inevitability of the country's continuing high inflation and its growing deficit in its balance of payments.

"We felt it had to come sooner or later," Edgar Molina, the Ford Motor Company's group vice president for Latin America, said. "We'll have to see how the float works in practice, but my personal opinion is that the Government isn't going to lift a finger until the peso drops to a level where they can get the full benefits of the devaluation."

Mexican banks were closed today because of the annual holiday marking the President's State of the Union Message to Congress, but some foreign bankers who were receiving reports from the United States and Europe, today forecast an effective devaluation of the currency from 12.50 pesos to the United States dollar to a new rate around 18 or 19 pesos.

Although the Bank of Mexico has promised to use its $1.3 billion worth of reserves to prevent erratic movements of the peso, President Echeverria told Congress today that "the new exchange rate should be established, in conditions of free convertibility, in response to real market forces (and) should be flexible for some time."

Some bankers here believe that, after perhaps one month of adjustment, the Bank of Mexico will establish a limited range within which the peso will be free to float. Larger movements of the peso would then be subject to political decisions as well as market forces.

According to Finance Minister Mario Ramon Beteta, the exchange rate will be set by the Bank of Mexico on a day-to-day basis, although there is still no indication of what price the central bank will be prepared to pay for dollars when foreign exchange dealings resume here tomorrow.

Large hotels in Mexico City reported that many Mexicans rushed there this morning in the hope of purchasing dollars, but found that dollars were only being bought, not sold—yesterday's discounted tourist rate of 12.40 pesos to the dollar.

More than a panic run on the peso tomorrow, however, Mexican economists fear a new wave of inflation, fed by speculation and by the annual across-the-board wage increase.

to be announced Sept. 13. Real estate prices, which had been moving upward in recent months in anticipation of a devaluation after December, are also expected to boom.

One department store, Puerto de Liverpool, was today already displaying prices about 20 percent above yesterday's. A General Electric refrigerator that last night was tagged at 6,995 pesos was this morning carrying a price of 8,300 pesos.

But the country's key tourist industry, which has suffered seriously from inflation and lack of competitiveness during the last two years, seems certain to benefit from the float during the coming winter season.

American companies, which have an investment portfolio here of more than $3 billion, may discover new investment or expansion has been made more attractive by the fall in the dollar cost of labor here. But large automobile, chemical and pharmaceutical companies will have to pay more pesos for their imported goods and may face short-term losses if the Government imposes strict price control.

The Government's basic objective of increasing Mexican exports through the float may also be hindered by the lack of spare industrial capacity stemming from the slump in private investment during the reform of the peso in the Echeverria Administration.

"Our manufactured and semi-manufactured products were being priced out of the world market by inflation," one Mexican businessman said, "but it is now a question of whether we can produce the goods to sell. Obviously we can add new

Business Briefs

Dollar Mostly Off Abroad; Gold Gains

BRUSSELS, Sept. 1 (UPI)—Gold staged a modest recovery on European bullion markets today, while the dollar fell against all currencies except the British pound.

The price of gold, which had opened at $103.875 an ounce in London, rose to $105.625 by closing time, $1.50 higher than yesterday's closing. In Zurich gold rose from $103.90 to $105.15.

In London the pound brought $1.7750 at closing time, against $1.7775 last night. Sterling also eased in Zurich from 4.4038 to 4.3850 Swiss francs and in Frankfurt from 4.494 to 4.473 marks. The dollar fell in Frankfurt from 2.53 to 2.52 marks. In Paris, it lost some of the ground it had gained yesterday, closing at 4.9250 francs against 4.9350. In Zurich it went from 2.4790 to 2.4707 Swiss francs.

August Car Output Up 7.9% Over '75

DETROIT, Sept. 1.—The domestic auto industry, swinging into 1977 model production, built 540,366 cars last month, up 7.9 percent from 500,826 cars in August, 1975. The increase was entirely attributable to the General Motors Corporation. It had a 33 percent production gain that more than offset production declines at the other three domestic producers.

The Ford Motor Company said output was off 6.2 percent, the Chrysler Corporation reported a 4 percent decline, and the American Motors Corporation said output was off 43.4 percent. A.M.C.'s output has been cut because of inventory problems, but the Ford and Chrysler declines were attributed to differences in model changeover programs this year from last.

In the January-August period, the four companies have built 5,664,319 cars, up 37.4 percent, or 1,543,282, from 4,121,037 last year at this time. G.M.'s output was up 43.2 percent; Ford's 31.6 percent, and Chrysler's 52.7 percent, but A.M.C.'s was off 33 percent.

Record World Exports Expected in '76

GENEVA, Sept. 1 (AP)—The volume of world exports is expected to surge more than 10 percent to a new peak this year and will exceed the record level of 1974 by 4 percent, the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade reported today.

Last year, world trade volume slipped about 5 percent, although the value of this trade was up 5 percent at $880 billion. Over the next few years, GATT said annual growth rates would be limited to the 4 to 5 percent generally targeted by governments.

"It is indeed difficult to imagine in the next few years a new investment boom which could carry aggregate annual growth rates beyond" these targets, the world trade body said. The GATT findings are contained in its latest annual report on international trade, which is to be published in a few weeks.

Peso's Devaluation Is Expected to Benefit Mexico

leading travel agencies as opening the way to a recovery and a new boom for Mexican tourism.

David L. Loretto, president and chief executive officer of Thomas Cook Inc., said that a cheaper peso would result in "a considerable increase of tourist business, just as it has proved to be the case with the recent devaluations by Britain and Italy."

A forecast of a "substantial stimulus" to Mexico's tourist trade, which earned more than $800 million from Americans alone last year, was made by Stephen Halsey, executive vice president for public affairs of the American Express Company.

"To the extent that devaluation is not eaten up by price increases," he said, "it should be a perceptible advantage to tourists and also give Mexico a competitive advantage over Southern United States and Caribbean resorts."

An investment analyst well versed on Mexico observed, that, although Mexico did not have too much potential for expanding exports, "it has a big capacity in tourism as a result of a lot of new hotel construction."

Mexican tourism has fallen. The number of visitors staying at least three days declined to 3,212,000 last year from 3,362,000 in 1974. About 80 percent of the tourists are Americans.

Boycott is Cited

A further decline this year has been attributed in part to a boycott by Jewish groups in this country because of what was considered an anti-Israel stand taken by Mexico at the United Nations.

Last November, Mexico joined with 71 countries in supporting a General Assembly resolution denouncing Zionism as racism. However, President Luis Echeverria Alvarez of Mexico asserted soon afterwards that, despite the vote, his Government "in no way identified Zionism with racism."

Although reports last winter indicated that the boycott apparently had resulted in cancellation of thousands of hotel reservations in Mexico, an investment analyst here said that the recession in this country was the cause for most of the decline in tourism.

When bars in Mexico closed yesterday for a holiday, the first test of the devaluation move came in foreign-exchange markets elsewhere. In New York, trading in Mexican pesos was termed "nominal," mainly because Mexican banks were closed and buyers and sellers also were closed yesterday, a trader for a major brokerage house here said that the share prices of Mexican equities traded in the United States were down about 30 percent. However, it was considered that some of the bearish pressure might ease with reopening of Mexican markets today.

Although Mexico was expected to gain the price-cutting advantage on exports that is made possible with devaluation, business sources here felt that this might be largely offset by the consequent rise in import prices.

More than 55 percent of Mexico's exports, which amounted to $7.12 billion last year, go to the United States. In imports, which last year amounted to $4.13 billion, 62 percent came from the United States.

SORGHUM FUTURES ARE TRADED AGAIN

New System Bothers Some on Kansas City Board

By H.J. MAIDENBERG

Special to The New York Times
KANSAS CITY, Mo., Sept. 1—Traders were once again shouting their bids for sorghum futures contracts today on the Kansas City Board of Trade as a market for the coarse grain used as livestock feed was resumed after a hiatus of 43 months.

But the traditional cries of traders lacked the enthusiasm of those buying and selling wheat in the exchange's trading hall. For one thing, floor traders conceded that they were unsure of the new system of trading sorghum in units of 5,000 bushels of 60 pounds each.

"We used to trade mlo [another name for sorghum] in units of 100 pounds in both the cash and old futures market," explained Frank F. Baumgartner, vice president of the exchange. "Changing to bushels requires a new set of mental calculations."

Nevertheless, Mr. Baumgartner sold the first new sorghum contract for the Simons-Shields-This Grain Company, a local grain-trading house he represents, to James Jordan for delivery next December at $2.60 a bushel.

Mr. Jordan said he was a broker for the Producers Grain Company, Amarillo, Tex., a large farmers cooperative that is the leading exporter of the feed grain.

Within minutes of the first trade, the March 1977 contract opened at $2.66 1/2 cents a bushel, the May delivery at $2.69 and the July at $2.68. Despite bids of $2.59, there were no trades in the September 1977 contract during the session. The four traded contracts closed within a few pennies of their opening. The December contract closed at $2.58, down two cents from the opening; March at $2.66 1/2, up two cents; May at $2.69, up a half cent; and July 1977 at $2.68, down a cent from its opening trade.

As the session wore on, however, trading in the sorghum and of the pit appeared to dwindle. The final volume of trading was 83 contracts. The open interest—the number of available contracts for trading will be reported tomorrow.

Soybeans Advance; Light Rain and Rise By Silver Are Cited

CHICAGO, Sept. 1 (AP)—Farm commodity futures, with large commercial support and short covering, moved sharply higher on the Chicago Board of Trade today.

Soybean futures closed with a gain of 16 cents a bushel, while soy oil advanced to the allowable limit of 100 points, or 1 cent a pound. Soybean meal rose $3 a ton. Corn closed with a gain of nearly 6 cents a bushel, while wheat and oats were up 4 cents.

Some trade sources suggested that the overnight and daytime rains that fell over sections of the Middle West were not quite so heavy as had been forecast. Other trade sources, noting that silver futures had advanced the permissible limit, theorized that soybeans were bullish because of this. Another bullish factor was a trade belief that Brazil had overestimated, and as a result overexported, both its soybean crop and soy products this year. This could increase demand for United States soybeans and products.

There were very few commercial and commission-house demand in the soybean complex from the opening bell. Oil hit the limit near the end of the session, but soybeans backed away after a gain of nearly 19 cents.

HERSHEY PAYMENTS DISCLOSED IN STUDY

The Hershey Foods Corporation said that an investigation of its operations showed that $29,000 in illegal domestic and foreign payments had been made between 1971 and 1975.

$14,000 was made in questionable payments by a foreign company, with which Hershey was involved, between 1973 and 1975.

The domestic contributions came from a company given to Hershey executives "so they could increase their civil contributions including political contributions," the company said. The officials gave the money to an "in-house" political club that functioned as a channel for the contributions.

A Down-to-Earth Shoe Drive

By LEONARD SLOANE

Perhaps 100 different companies are now manufacturing a negative-heel shoe, in which the heel is lower than the toe. So when Levine, Huntley, Schmidt, Plapier, & Beaver Inc. acquired the advertising account for Earth shoes two months ago, it recognized that a new approach would be helpful in stimulating sales.

"We decided to go after the non-user rather than run competitive ads telling why our negative heels were better than other negative heels," said Harold Levine, president of the agency. "We're going for the 90 percent rather than the 10 percent."

The campaign that breaks next week in metropolitan newspapers and around the Christmas holiday season in Time and Newsweek magazines will reflect this difference. A recurring theme will be "The Earth Shoe, For Every Walk Of Life," to emphasize not only the name of the product, but also the advantages attributed to the concept.

The Earth shoe, a wide, square-toed shoe originated by Anne Kalso of Denmark, first went on sale in the United States on Earth Day in 1970. From a single store in New York, its American distribution has grown to 130 stores throughout the country—most of which are owned by independent retailers. Its initial customers were largely young men and women of college and immediately post-college age. In fact, many of the Earth shoe store owners are members of that age group who enjoyed wearing the product and thought that their peers would enjoy it too.

"Because of its good brand recognition, we want to sell the shoe to a broader market now," said Mr. Levine. "After all, the youth market of the sixties is the new establishment of the seventies. And there is also the big market composed of those between 35 and 45."

Direct Mail Marketing vs. Privacy

The Direct Mail/Marketing Association invited Eleanor Guggenheimer, Commissioner of New York City's Department of Consumer Affairs, to address the group at its annual List Day meeting in New York. And she pulled no punches in telling the organization that the way mailing lists are compiled could constitute an invasion of privacy.

"I can't seem to make a move lately without a whole slew of businesses knowing what my movements are," she said. "It's very disconcerting, no matter how generous you are, to receive 10 solicitations for charitable donations for every one donation you give."

Mrs. Guggenheimer also told the direct marketing executives that since consumers did not ask to have their names put on a mailing list, they should not have to ask to have their names removed. "Marketers should offer consumers the choice of whether or not they wish to be on a mailing list," she asserted.

After her keynote speech, the association distributed a statement attributed to Celia Wallace, its vice president and consumer affairs director. In it, she said: "The direct mail industry's own survey shows that an overwhelming majority of American consumers want more advertising mail rather than less. They are able to receive such mail precisely because of the identification of markets represented by mailing lists."

The company intends to spend about $1.5 million to advertise Earth shoes, with both the newspaper and magazine ads containing the names and addresses of the local dealers. In addition, there is a substantial budget for cooperative ads placed by individual store owners. That's thinking positively, not negatively.

Exploring the Ad Field

With an assist from various corporations, Exploring, a division of the Boy Scouts of America, has been able to provide first-hand experience in career fields for teenagers enrolled in this educational program.

The career program in New York City, just a couple of years old, is about to get its first two Explorer posts specializing in advertising, sponsored by Ted Bates & Company and Albert Frank-Guenther Law Inc. According to the Boy Scouts Greater New York Council, this effort marks the first such advertising posts in a metropolitan area. Starting next month, some 25 boys and girls in each post between the ages of 14 and 21 will meet to receive instruction, attend lectures and gain experience in the field of advertising. Ted Bates, with Roy Tilles as post advisor, will counsel those primarily from upper Manhattan and Queens, while Albert Frank, with John Alexander as post advisor, will advise those living primarily in lower Manhattan and Brooklyn.

Under the program, the Explorers will take actual or fictitious products and design complete ad campaigns for them. These meetings will take place at the agencies' offices, not around the camp fire.

VW to Raise U.S. Ad Outlay

Volkswagen — the West German automobile manufacturer whose United States sales have slipped markedly from 570,000 cars in 1970 to 270,000 in 1975—has made a "major" increase in its American ad budget this year to help stimulate sales. Last year, Volkswagen of America spent more than $37 million for advertising.

One manifestation of this increase, according to John Slaven, the company's director of advertising, is the addition of television sponsorship of specials to the previous scatter plan for its spots. A number of new commercials will be shown along with older ones on the Election Day coverage on ABC and on the broadcast of the movie "Gone With the Wind" on NBC shortly afterwards.

With Doyle Dane Bernbach as the agency, Volkswagen also plans to utilize 60-second spots in the fourth quarter, as well as the 30-second commercials that have been used exclusively in recent years.

Needham Changes

Needham & Grohmann Inc., a 44-year-old agency specializing in hotel, resort and travel-related accounts, made some changes in its executive ranks yesterday and announced a new account too. Charles M. Edgar is joining the agency as executive vice president and director of planning, while John L. Gillespie and Anthony Cornell were named senior vice presidents. The newly acquired account is the Puerto Rico Sheraton Hotel, previously handled by Batten, Barton, Durstine & Osborn.

present 75 percent of the "fair" parity price to 70 percent and make a 22.5 percent cut—down to 1.2 million acres—in acreage eligible for support.

It also would remove penalties for planting peanuts without Federal allotments. Growers could plant unlimited acreage for sale in comparatively low-priced export markets and for crushing into oil and livestock feed meal.

The Senate committee, meanwhile, approved a proposed joint Congressional resolution directing Agriculture Secretary Earl L. Buttz to cut the cost of the current peanut support program by resuming sale of Government surplus stocks (acquired under the support program) at competitive world prices.

The resolution charges that Mr. Buttz's refusal to sell the surplus has "artificially and intentionally" inflated program costs.

EX-CHEMICAL AIDE UNDER INDICTMENT

Most of the money came directly from the Chemical Bank, according to the indictment, but it added that the defendant had submitted false statements to the Bank of New York to induce it to make corporate loans.

To make it appear as if the borrowing corporations were operating profitably, the indictment said, the defendants prepared fraudulent financial statements for the corporations and also made false bank entries.

"The false and fraudulent practices engaged in by the defendants and the co-conspirators described above," the indictment added, "caused the Chemical Bank to lose about $1 million in bad loans and the Bank of New York to lose about $150,000 in bad loans."

The defendants were charged with conspiracy, embezzlement, submitting false statements and making false entries on the bank books to cover up improper loans.

Japanese Denies Yen Is Pegged

Fumihiko Togo, Japanese Ambassador to the United States, yesterday in a letter to Representative Henry S. Reuss denied that his Government has been involved in manipulating the yen to gain export trade advantages.

The Wisconsin Democrat in an earlier letter to the Ambassador had charged the Japanese with keeping the yen artificially low.

A Chase Manhattan Bank executive said yesterday that brokerage activities by banks were not in competition with securities firms.

Yesterday, said that "confirmed" the resignation of Madeline H. McWhinney as president and a member of the board of directors.

Miss McWhinney is joining New York University's faculty of business administration as a visiting lecturer for the fall semester.

Although she had decided last spring that she would leave the bank, and a tentative separation agreement was reached about that time, a bank spokesman said yesterday that both sides had been bound by a legal agreement not to make it public.

The former president "performed a key role in the planning and formative stages of the bank," Evelyn J. Lehman, who heads the board of directors, said in the announcement.

A spokesman for the First Women's Bank said that both men and women were being interviewed to fill the position.

JOB CHANGES: James R. Wolfe, has been named president and chief operating officer of the Chicago and North Western Transportation Company. He had been vice president for operations.

Wilmot F. Wheeler Jr. has resigned as chairman of American Chain and Cable Company, Inc. He was succeeded by John L. King, chairman of Babcock & Wilcox Ltd. of Britain.

The company recently became the sole shareholder of American Chain.

INFLATION HOPES LIFT AMEX PRICES

Syntax, in Reporting a Suit Against It, Drops 3/4

Prices continued to advance on the American Stock Exchange yesterday, with the exchange's market-value index rising 0.43 point to 102.41, its fourth gain in a row.

Volume rose to 1.65 million shares from 1.47 million a day earlier, with 370 issues ahead and 224 down and 288 unchanged. Optimism over inflation was viewed as a positive factor.

Syntax, which reported a suit charging the drug company with making false and misleading statements about the drug Naprosyn, topped the active list, trading 126,400 shares, off 1/4 at 24 1/2.

Options activity advanced in moderate trading, with volume totaling 29,019 contracts, up from 26,230 a day earlier. Merrill Lynch Oct. 25s led the active list, gaining 9/16 at 15 1/8 on 1,251 contracts.

Fire Union Head Re-Elected: The Unifired Fire Officers Association in New York City yesterday re-elected battalion Chief Edwin F. Jennings as president.

Loss of Jobs in New York City Shows a Big Red

EDWARD C. BURES: New York City lost 112,000 more jobs between mid-1975 and mid-1976 while the country as a whole was adding 2.5 million jobs, the Bureau of Labor Statistics reported yesterday.

One encouraging note for the city, however, was that the great loss in manufacturing jobs here—nearly 300,000 since 1969—was nearly brought to a halt. Comparing averages for the first half of 1976 with the same period of 1975, the bureau found a net loss of 6,600 manufacturing jobs. The comparable loss the year before had been 74,000.

Although the decline in the city in that one-year period was considerably less than in the year before, the bureau's most recent estimates bring city job losses to more than 600,000 since 1970.

Herbert Biemstock, regional commissioner of the bureau, which is part of the United States Department of Labor, noted a sharp change, however, in the way the city was losing jobs.

A few years ago gains in government jobs in New York City partly offset the huge loss of private industry jobs that is, manufacturing, construction, transportation, wholesale and retail trade and services.

Some of the figures: The bureau's latest estimate, based on averages for the first half of 1975, compared with the same period of 1974, showed a loss of 64,000 government jobs in New York City. Municipal government layoffs and cutbacks accounted for 58,400 of that total.

Manufacturer Leaves For Ridgefield, Conn.

Clarkson Industries, a manufacturer of control systems for air and water pollution, has moved its corporate headquarters from New York City to Ridgefield, Conn.

According to the company's chairman, Revis L. Stephenson, Clarkson's 12 headquarters employees moved to Connecticut in July when the company was forced to give up the building it had occupied for more than 50 years at 107 Fourth Avenue, near 13th Street.

"We had to move somewhere and Connecticut looked like it made sense," said Mr. Stephenson, a resident of Greenwich, Conn., for the last 10 years.

Forty other employees in the company's sales engineering group were offered the opportunity to relocate to Syracuse, where Clarkson also maintains manufacturing facilities, but many of them could stay in New York, Mr. Stephenson said.

Summarizing the situation, Samuel M. Ehrenhalt, the bureau's deputy regional commissioner, said the picture despite the big loss in city government positions.

"There has been a slowdown in the rate of private job losses," he said. "In manufacturing the loss has been brought to a halt. While this is encouraging, considering the bleak situation we have seen almost uninterrupted for the past six years in private job losses."

Coleman Picks Illinois Location for St. Louis Airport

By PAUL DELANEY
Special to The New York Times
ST. LOUIS, Sept. 1—Transportation Secretary William T. Coleman Jr. ended more than a decade of Federal indecision today by selecting a site in Illinois for location of a new airport for the St. Louis area.

The New York Times/Sept. 2, 1976
Proposed site of airport is between Waterloo and Columbia.

The decision, a major one that will affect the economic growth of the entire region, did not end the controversy, and the reaction was predictable. Missourians, who make up 75 percent of the present users of the airport, and some farmers on the Illinois side of the river were disappointed and bitter. While an apparent majority of the residents in Illinois, especially in economically depressed East St. Louis, were pleased.

The issue had seriously polarized both sides of the river. Some St. Louis officials were concerned that other pressing problems were being neglected as a result of the airport controversy.

To ease the gradual elimination of Lambert, Mr. Coleman's decision provides job guarantees to current employees and assurances that residents of Missouri will be given equal treatment in construction of the new airport, assumption of Lambert Field's debts and equal employment for women and minorities.

He also said that farmers would have the first chance to reacquire any land they sold in the event the facility is not built.

New York Is Planning a Hatchery on Lake Ontario Although the Fish There Are Too Contaminated

tists have found that, under certain circumstances, mirex breaks down into the controversial chemical Kepone, which is toxic to wildlife and human reproductive systems and has become the focus of multiple Federal, state and private lawsuits in Virginia.

Kepone has been detected only recently in Lake Ontario fish by researchers for the United States Food and Drug Administration, according to sources there. It remains unclear as to what the levels are or how widespread the Kepone contamination is.

The New York Times, in an investigation based on extensive interviews and examination of scientific data, found evidence of contamination of Lake Ontario fish and wildlife. The investigation also showed that within the Department of Environmental Conservation, there was a lack of knowledge monition, it is believed that thousands of salmon will be eaten. But scientists fear that massive damage may be done to the environment even if the salmon are not eaten.

If the fish are caught and thrown back, they may be eaten by gulls or minks and other animals, and the chemical contaminants would move up the food chain. If the fish are composted and used as fertilizer, the chemicals will enter the earth.

Salmon from the proposed Lake Ontario hatchery in Pulasaki, N.Y., would not necessarily start out contaminated. State officials have yet to decide on their source of water supply for the hatchery, but such fresh water hatcheries often use uncontaminated local feeder streams for their water. This means that the young fish would have little or no toxic content until they were removed and stocked in contaminated bodies of water like Lake Ontario.

Ward B. Stone, an associate wildlife pathologist with the state's department, has peppered his superiors with more than two dozen memorandums in the last few months, expressing his dismay over the present salmon-stocking program, the plans to build the hatchery, and the department's failure to learn more about the mirex problem faster. He has also raised questions about the possible synergistic effect of eating multiple contaminants in a single fish.

"The Lake Ontario salmon program has a dark cloud hanging over it because of the pollutants, and the program may well produce hundreds of thousands of salmon that can't be consumed by humans and which are a threat to the health of wildlife such as mink," he wrote last July 14 to Stuart Free, chief of the Bureau of Wildlife.

"I recommend that the Lake Ontario salmon program be carefully evaluated on the basis of crude Canadian and American toxin data. It is interesting and sad to note that at least some of the mirex pollution of Lake Ontario was undoubtedly done under government permit by Hooker Chemical, Niagara Falls, N.Y."

Officials at Hooker, a subsidiary of Occidental Petroleum, would neither confirm nor deny Dr. Stone's statement. The company appeared reluctant to say much about what it makes and what might be in its effluent, which is discharged into the Niagara River. The Niagara flows into Lake Ontario.

"Mirex is a hot potato," said Jerry Wilkenfeld, director of environmental health for Hooker, "and we are under strict orders to refer all inquiries to the public relations department."

James Green, Hooker's public relations man, confirmed that the company made Mirex between 1959 and 1967 "on a batch basis" for Allied Chemical, which marketed it.

"We haven't made Mirex since 1967, and we never made it continuously," Mr. Green said. "We haven't even ground it since April of last year."

Mirex is normally ground as part of the preparation process. Some of the information on Hooker's discharges is contained in Hooker's National Pollutant Discharge Elimination System permit, which is required by Federal law before chemicals are dumped into the river. A copy of it was obtained by The Times.

The permit was issued by the United States Environmental Protection Agency. The permit allows Hooker to dump a maximum of 950 pounds of unspecified chlorinated hydrocarbons into the river on a given day, with the average set at 250 pounds a day. The maximum is supposed to be reached only on relatively rare occasions.

Chlorinated hydrocarbons are man-made compounds as PCB's and DDT. They do not readily degrade in the environment, and persist for years. When ingested, they tend to accumulate in the fatty tissue of fish, animals and humans. Taken in small amounts, chlorinated hydrocarbons do not exhibit their toxicity readily, but they have become suspect as a cause of cancer. Mirex is technically an organochlorine, the permit for its use is set at 7 pounds of chlorinated hydrocarbons a year, shocked," said a scientist, who asked, "If you told me that this is incredible, I have even seen much junk. Is this a scam?"

There was also a feeling among some department members that creation of the Ontario fishery should go forward, despite the possible consequences. Millions of salmon have already been stocked in Lake Ontario and Lake Erie in the past few years and are prized by fishermen.

In Washington, a spokesman for the Food and Drug Administration said that last May the agency established an "action level" of 0.1 part per million for mirex in fish. Fish containing that level or more will be seized if shipped in interstate commerce. There is no commercial salmon fishing in Lake Ontario, although other fish—most notably white perch—are caught commercially. The perch are frequently sent to New York City.

Moreover, in checking the tests done by the Food and Drug Administration between last Sept. 15 and Nov. 25, a wide range of mirex levels was found, some of them exceeding the "action level."

The New York Times/Sept. 2, 1978

Found in 16 of 17 Samples

Mirex turned up in 16 out of 17 samples. The range was reported from 0.03 chemical, polychlorinated biphenyls (PCB's) at levels of "about 15 to 30 times higher than those reported for mirex."

The Government researchers, who were looking primarily for PCB's, said their findings on mirex "can only be considered as approximations."

The Federal researchers noted there were some Canadian studies "which add support to the presumption that a mirex problem may be developing in Lake Ontario."

The most recent Canadian study, made less than three months ago, suggests that United States researchers were on target last fall and that the Canadians did not equivocate about their data.

The Canadians reported they had found coho salmon in Lake Ontario with both mirex and PCB levels above the guidelines established by the United States Government.

The mean level in 28 salmon tested was 5.77 parts per million of PCB's (the PCB guideline for fish is 5 parts per million) and 0.231 parts per million of mirex, more than twice the United States safe standard. Other chemicals found by the Canadians included dieldrin, benzene hexachloride and DDE, a metabolite of DDT. The Canadians did not speculate on where any of the chemicals might have originated.

1,000 Fish Analyzed

The Ontario Ministry of the Environment said that it had analyzed approximately 1,000 fish from various locations in the Great Lakes, but that only fish from Lake Ontario had "measurable mirex residues."

Other fish species besides salmon found in Lake Ontario and containing mirex included white bass, yellow perch, brown bullhead, alewife and smelt. One smelt had three times the United States guideline for edibility.

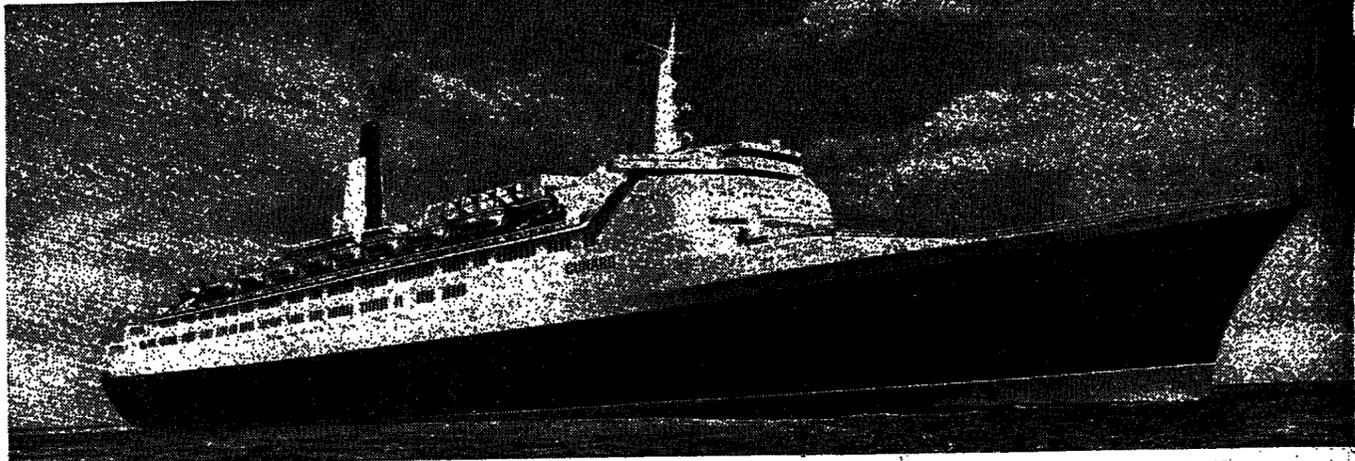

Sports fishermen are expected to take 60,000 salmon from Lake Ontario this year. Commercial fishermen from the United States and Canada while not after salmon, will probably take about 2.7 million pounds of various fish from Lake Ontario, 2.3 million pounds of it bound for Canadian tables.

The New York State Department of Environmental Conservation has, as yet, made no formal statement on mirex to either sports or commercial fishermen, although two weeks ago, shortly after receiving inquiries from a Times reporter, its pace in attempting to delineate the problem quickened.

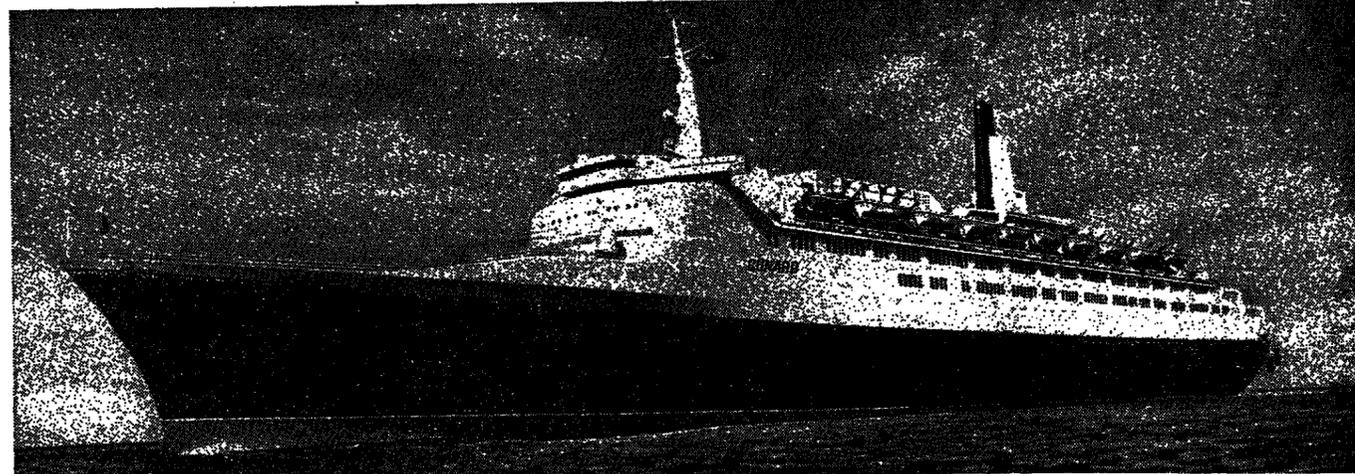

As of now, all fishermen have been advised is that because of PCB contamination, they should eat no more than one meal of Lake Ontario salmon a week. Pregnant women have been warned not to eat any.

Despite the department's ad-
